Minden gets additional school board trustee

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

When the new Haliburton Board of Education meets after the fall election, there will be one less trustee from Dysart et al, and one more trustee from Anson, Hindon and Minden at the table.

Although the board decided to keep the number of trustees serving on the board at 14, the distribution of the trustees amongst the municipalities could not be kept the same. Minden will have three trustees instead of the two it has now and Dysart will have four instead of its current five. The other townships will each have one trustee except Bicroft and Cardiff who will continue to share one.

The change came about under the would be distributed among the 10 municipalities. This task was given to the clerks of the three largest municipalities — Dysart, Minden and Stanhope. The board had hoped to keep the distribution the same as it is now, five for Dysart, two for Minden, one shared between Bicroft and Cardiff and one each for the remaining six townships.

But when the clerks applied the formula they found that Minden's share of the total population was greater than its share of the total assessment so the number of trustees it was entitled to was three instead of two.

The clerks then used an alternate formula. They designated the townships of Glamorgan and Sherborne et al as "low population" areas. Under Bill C-125 high new provincial law, Bill C-125, introduced by the Ministry of Education. The law made population the basis for trustee distribution rather than tax assessment.

It's not a case of Dysart giving up a trustee to Minden, but rather a case of Minden having a large enough population to warrant the added representation.

The board held a special meeting on August 4 to deal with the new legislation. At that meeting it decided to try and keep the composition of the board as close to the current make-up as possible. Under the new bill, Haliburton's Board of Education would be entitled to 12 trustees, two less than the 14 who now sit on the board. (There is also a trustee representing the separate school interests of Bicroft and Cardiff.) The trustees exercised an option to add two more members to the base number, bringing the total back up to 14.

The next step involved applying the new population based formula to determine how the trustee positions population areas agree to give up one trustee among them to the low population areas. In effect each of the larger municipalities would relinquish a fraction of a trustee. When the fractions are totalled they produce a whole number representing one trustee.

But even under the new method, the clerks found Minden was entitled to three trustee and Dysart was entitled to four. They could not justify denying Minden its third trustee for the sake of preserving the status quo.

Director of Education Stuart Baker says it's important to realize that it's not a case of Dysart "giving up a trustee" to Minden but rather a case of Minden having a large enough population to warrant the added representation on the board.

Everything was possible at the Monmouth Agricultural Society's Fifth Annual Fair in Wilberforce on the weekend — even horses could turn into unicorns, or at least that's what Marilyn Winder of

Dysart building boom biggest in its history

by LEN PIZZEY
Editor

Local contractors, tradesmen and building supply retailers in Dysart et al are experiencing the biggest construction boom in the municipality's history. Despite a late spring that delayed the start of many construction projects, almost $6 million worth of building permits were granted in Dysart in the first six months of the year. This compares with $5.3 million for the same period last year, statistics provided by chief building inspector Dick Schell show.

Last year's total included some major commercial projects, notably at PineStone Inn, while this year residences and cottages account for the majority of construction activity in the area.

While the dollar total of the permits is impressive, actual expenditures on construction almost certainly are higher. In many cases a base figure of $65 per square foot of floor space is used when permits are issued, but finish work and fixtures add substantially to actual construction spending rolling through the local economy.

To the end of June, permits for new dwellings totalled $2.45 million, while new cottages added another $2.7 million. Last year for the same period, new dwelling permits totalled just $1.5 million, and new cottages totalled $1.84 million, an increase of almost $2 million in these types of construction this year.

Skyrocketing costs stall sewage project project remains at a standstill while council and property owners seek a meeting with Ontario environment minister James Bradley.

A formal request for the meeting was made a month ago, but so far no date for it has been set.

In the meantime, rapidly rising costs and continued delays threaten to end the project altogether. Estimated costs for the five kilometre line and sewage plant expansion have passed the six million dollar mark, almost three times the estimated cost of the project when it was first proposed three years ago.

The resort owners' share of the project has risen proportionately, all but putting it out of reach for some, if not all of the 10 commercial properties it would service.

What's more, an environmental impact study of the sewage plant ex-

Scott to seek re-election

Conservatives honour their own at Kinmount barbecue

by JAY KERR-WILSON

Conservative MP Bill Scott will run for re-election in the riding of Victoria-Haliburton if he receives the nomination.

Scott told The Echo he "fully intends to accept the nomination if offered," but he doesn't expect an election until the spring.

Scott made the statement at the Victoria-Haliburton Federal Progressive Conservative's Association annual barbecue in Kinmount on Saturday. Two hundred and fifty members and guests attended the event, held at the Kinmount Fairgrounds, to socialize, raise money and listen to guest speaker Bill Domm, MP for Peterborough.

Domm began his after-dinner speech with a tribute to Scott and praised the Kinmount native for his 23-year representation of the Victoria-Haliburton riding.

"Somebody had better convince Bill Scott to run again and hold the seat for the Conservatives in the federal election," said Domm. He spoke of the "high regard" that Scott's peers hold him in and complimented Scott's wife Betty by calling her "Bill's greatest asset in Victoria-Haliburton."

The riding is steeped in Conservative tradition, according to Domm, who called Scott's constituents, "truly committed, hard working people who come from the part of the country where heritage, customs and tradition mean something and you get what you work for." Domm criticized the current trend of "looking for something you don't earn but expect." He said the people who hold these expectations are the same people "who cry the loudest when the government has a deficit."

His message? "The more you can get government out of your life and out of your business the better off the country will be."

Government spending isn't the only target on Domm's hit list. He had some harsh words about the Liberal's introduction of the metric system into Canadian society. Scott and Domm were part of a group of Conservative MPs who opened a "Freedom to Measure Gas Station" outside of Ottawa in 1982. Customers at the gas station could buy gas in either litres or gallons at a time when the Liberal government had passed legislation banning the use of the

MOTORCYCLE RECOVERED

A 1984 red and white Yamaha motorcycle has been found in the bush off Indian Point Road on Drag Lake. The bike was reported stolen from Toronto in June. A white male, about 6' tall of slim build and with dirty, average length hair was seen operating the bike in the Drag lake area. Anyone with information about this person or the motor bike should contact Const. Al Bibby at 286-1431.

STOLEN TRUCK RECOVERED

An investigation into a single vehicle accident on Highway 118, west of Camarvon, has revealed that the truck involved was stolen from Orillia.

The driver was seen leaving the scene and was arrested several hours later about 6 km west of the accident scene.

Tim Potter, 27, of Orillia, has been charged with possession of stolen property and failing to comply with a recognizance.

INJURY ACCIDENT

Three people were injured on Friday in a two car accident on Peninsula Drive in Haliburton. The accident occurred at about 4:50 p.m.

Police say Stephen Higgins, of West Guilford, was west bound when another, eastbound vehicle turned left in front of him. Frederick Nimigon, of Haliburton, was operating the second vehicle. He and his passenger Justine Nimigon, as well as Higgins were taken to Haliburton Hospital.

House damaged when storm fells large tree

by MIKE PARK
Staff Reporter

High winds and rain on Sunday night wrecked havoc across the county. One home on South Kashagawigamog suffered more than $10,000 damage when a tree was blown over on top of it.

Alec McLeod, owner of the home with his wife Cecile, says the tree fell on the house at about 9:00 p.m. At first they didn't realize how extensive the damage was; they didn't even know the tree had fallen until about 6:30 a.m. Monday morning, when they got up.

"I was surprised," he says. Neither he nor his wife heard a thump when the tree fell. When the power went out and the phone went dead, they blamed it on the weather and went to bed early.

McLeod says the tree was older than 100 years old but still healthy. He believes a combination of strong wind and sudden rain caused the tree to fall. It was snapped like a twig about 10 meters from the ground.

McLeod estimates that between $10,000 and $20,000 damage was done to his house. He is relieved, however, that it was only the house and that he and his wife were not hurt. No furniture was damaged either.

Commercial use of house tested in Stanhope

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

Stanhope council will seek legal counsel in a debate centering on whether a Bayshore Road resident's use of his property is contravening the definition of "home occupation use."

Barry Stewart, who owns Minden Electric on Bobcaygeon Road, is storing business supplies in a garage and shed on his residential property on the Boshkung Lake private road. As well, for times when he is not at the Minden office, there is a small office with a two-way radio he uses to contact employees driving in the company trucks. The property is zoned Shoreline Residential 1, which allows for "home occupation use"—the family residing on the property can use it in conjunction with their occupation as long as "such home occupation shall be clearly secondary to the main residential use."

Stanhope council, which endorsed a building permit for the four-bay garage (three doors on one side, one door at the end) and the storage shed, says it believes Stewart's use of the property complies with the zoning by-law. But some cottagers disagree and made their views known at last Wednesday's council meeting.

"Can you run a business from a shoreline residential property," Frank Schlotter, President of the Bayshore Road Cottagers Association, asked council.

"The key is the definition of business," replied clerk-administrator Gerald Bain. The business, Minden Electric, is run from the shop on the Bobcaygeon Road; council feels that storing items for that business in a garage at his home does not mean Stewart is running his business from there.

One of the cottagers at the meeting, Paul Carroll, is a lawyer with a Toronto firm. He asked one of his colleagues to review the zoning definition and in a letter brought forward at the council meeting, lawyer Paul Kennedy states "it would appear that the current use does not comply with the regulations governing a Home Occupation Use."

The letter states that the "the use in question is manifested by, among other things, outside storage of materials (namely, large hydro poles), a large barn-type garage in which business vehicles are parked, supplies of electrical components are stored and an electrical work shop is housed, electrical supply trucks making deliveries of electrical components, other electrical contractors attend the premises to purchase electrical components and business

New principal brings his philosophy to HHSS

by MIKE PARK
Staff Reporter

Haliburton Highlands Secondary School's new principal has arrived and is excited about his first year at his new school.

Peter Forgrave has replaced Andy Hemphill as principal at HHSS and will begin his command on September 6, the day school starts. Right now he and his family are getting settled into Haliburton.

Forgrave has been a teacher at Michipicoten High School in Wawa since 1969 and a vice-principal there since 1981. He's taught phys-ed, history, geography and law, experience which gives him insight into various classes. The decision to leave Wawa was part of a career move.

"Professionally, it was an opportunity to be a principal in a high-school," he says.

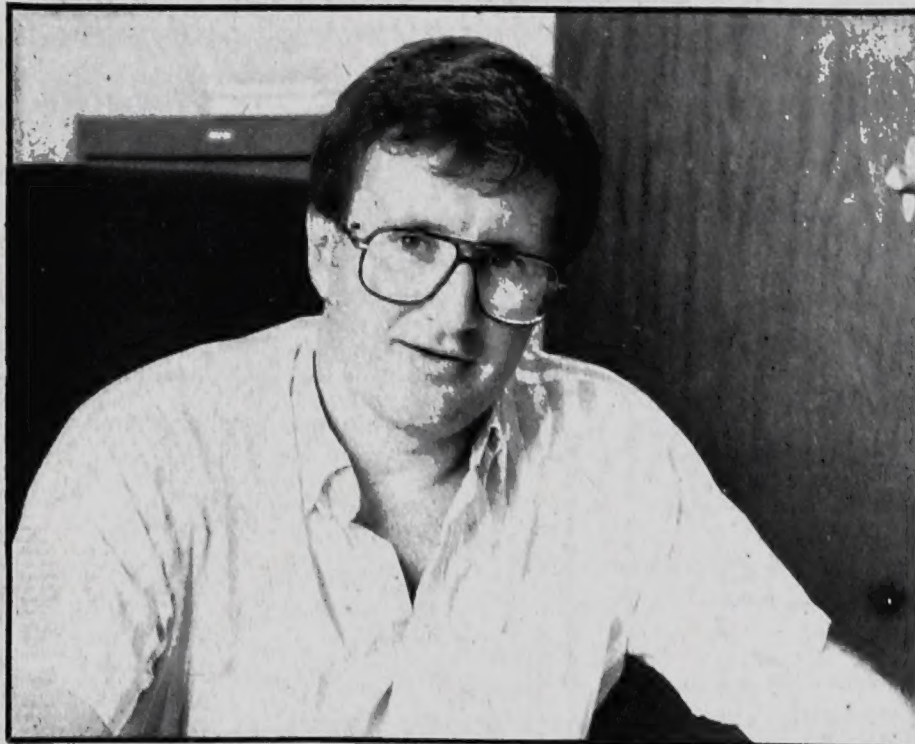

Forgrave likes the Haliburton Board of Education set up because it is small and personal, much like his old board in Wawa. This means they can be more committed to the welfare of the students than a big, impersonal city board can be.

The town of Haliburton itself also drew Forgrave to the area. The people are friendly and proud of their community, he says, and have been very helpful to him so far. He also points out that the town is the best combination of the outdoor life he loved in Wawa and the city life he liked when he grew up in Georgetown, near Waterloo.

"Haliburton has everything we wanted but is close enough for us to take advantage of the city," he says. And one of the best advantages of being close to Toronto is the ability to visit his parents more readily.

Forgrave grew up in Georgetown and taught for two years in Brampton before he went to Wawa, so he has ties down here. He says he was worried because his kids really didn't know their grandparents because of prohibitive distance between Wawa and Georgetown, more than ten hours of driving.

But he and his wife Laraine still love the outdoors and that's why Haliburton is the perfect middle ground. Susie, 13, Melissa 12, and Greg 7, were a little apprehensive about leaving their old friends, he says, but are excited about making new ones. The whole family seems to be happy to be here.

"I think I'm really lucky," he says. "We're really looking forward to becoming part of the community."

Forgrave says he hasn't been here long enough to suggest any changes at the school but he does plan on putting his teaching philosophy to work while he's here. He thinks an education should be a full one, that there is more to school than the intellectual and academic side; it's also important to shape and learn about the emotional and social side. To that end he wants the school to offer this kind of complete education package and keep this idea in mind when teaching.

"We're looking after them (the students) as people," he explains.

New profile introduces Haliburton

Development Corp. opens county's door

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

TO COMPANIES WHICH WANT to start up operations in Haliburton, the county is wrapped in plain brown paper — they don't know what the county has to offer and whether there is a demand for their product or not.

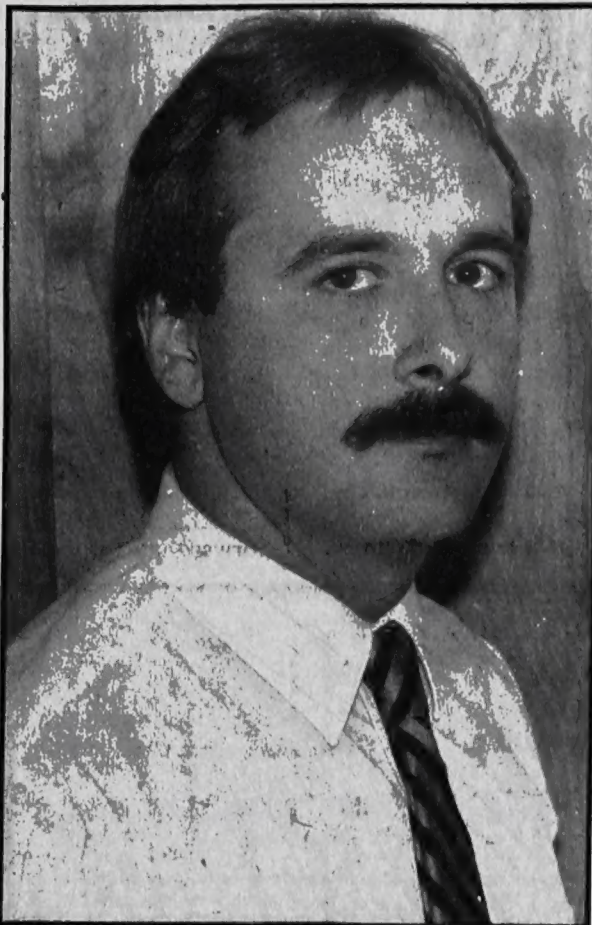

But the Haliburton County Development Corporation (HCDC) is removing the brown paper and presenting the county in a glossy format, complete with colour pictures.

The HCDC has prepared a community profile of Haliburton to provide companies with information about the county. The profile contains such necessary data as location, transportation, industry, tourism and recreation, commercial development, demographics, employment, community services and communications.

Andy Campbell, HCDC's manager, says profiles are essential marketing tools that are available in almost every community in Ontario. He learned about them through his involvement with other development corporations and felt there was a demand for a similar project in Haliburton. The corporation receives at least 20 requests a year for stats and information pertaining to Haliburton and, up until now, hasn't had a complete information package which would answer a prospective business's questions.

Getting to know us

The community profile is just the first step in Campbell's plan to familiarize the business world with the county. He is also going to compile profiles for specific industries. Once a company receives the general overview of the county available in the community profile, it can then be sent the specific profile for its particular industry, outlining the features and advantages which make locating in Haliburton attractive.

HCDC's Andy Campbell

There will be 2,000 profiles printed. They will be available upon demand to businesses interested in locating in the county. Campbell will also distribute copies to travel agencies in the city, other economic commissions, and the municipal offices in the county.

The back cover of the profile will have a pocket containing the pertinent statistics of the county. When the stats change as the county grows, updating the profile will simply be a matter of changing the stat sheets inserted in the back pocket.

The format of the profile is similar to a travel magazine. The information is printed on high stock paper and accompanied by large colour photographs.

The profile is just part of an initiative to have the HCDC do more for economic development in the county than just lend money. The HCDC's primary goal is to help businesses with financial planning. The corporation serves existing companies who wish to expand as well as getting new companies off to a sound start.

The corporation was set up as part of a federally funded program to encourage economic development on a community level five years ago. The intent was that as the program grew it would develop as a community based entity which would provide input on the nature of government policies which would help economic development across Canada.

The new community profile will provide potential new business owners with stability and information about Haliburton — information that wasn't available in one package before now.

The HCDC is provided with $1.55-million to invest in local business interests over five years. After the five years is up the revenue generated from the interest on the loans it makes is supposed to make the corporation self-sufficient. The HCDC just began its third year of operation as a money lending agency. Over the past two years it has invested $578,000 in local enterprises.

Campbell says the government is not really being realistic in expecting the development corporations in the program to attain self-sufficiency with only $1.5 million worth of loans. It's difficult to project exactly how the corporation will fare after the government funds are cut off. The corporation's survival will depend on the rate of inflation and the amount of money lost because of bad loans. So far bad loans have accounted for less than one per cent of the corporation's investments and Campbell says they are right on target for achieving self-sufficiency, but that could change over the next three years.

If the HCDC were allowed $2-million instead of $1.5-million, Campbell would be more optimistic but as it is, it will be "very very close."

Campbell thinks the government should treat each development corporation on its own merits instead of using a blanket policy for the whole program. "If a particular corporation is obviously failing to achieve its mandate, then of course it would be a waste to commit any more funds, but if a corporation is doing well and meeting its mandate, it should be allowed to increase its investments."

A change of government in the next federal election, expected to be called for sometime this fall, probably won't affect the operation of the corporation. Campbell says the program was started under a Liberal government and modified by the Conservatives so in all likelihood it wouldn't be dropped.

ped. It may however be subject to a name change.

No end to building boom

The recent boom in Haliburton's economy has produced a lot of requests to the corporation for loans and Campbell can't foresee an end to the economy's growing spurt especially in the construction sector.

When a person comes to the HCDC for financial advice, Campbell takes a thorough approach in examining the feasibility of the proposal whether it be to start a new business or expand an existing one. Campbell plays the devil's advocate to ensure the client has planned ahead for all possibilities. He helps the entrepreneur determine how much capital is needed, the pay back time for the loan, how long it will take for the venture to become profitable and if the profits will be enough to justify the investment. Location, costs, and product demand are all factors in

On the line

There are strong indications that a long-hoped for sewer line to serve resorts on the north side of Lake Kashagawigamog may never be built. Officially the project has not been abandoned by anyone — not by the resort owners, not by Dysart council, and not by the provincial government — at least, not yet. But it is clear that countless delays, misinformation, a lack of political will and sharply escalating costs pose a very serious threat to the project's viability. And if the opportunity to construct the line is lost, it will not soon come again.

Why should the public care about any of this? The line is designed to serve only a few commercial properties, not residences or cottages. Resorts already benefit from government guaranteed, low interest loans and outright grants through programmes such as Destinations East that are not available to other kinds of businesses. If the resorts say they cannot afford their share of the project and it is never built, will it matter to the rest of us?

The answer is an emphatic yes. The issue is much larger than the short term expansion hopes of local resorts, though in itself that is certainly important. The very health of the local environment on which the future of the Haliburton area depends, is also at stake. And that is too important to be subject to government vacillation and bureaucratic confusion.

Three years ago, it was anticipated that the Haliburton sewer line extension project would cost about $2.3 million. That included engineering and construction of a forced main down Highway 121 to service the major resorts on Lake Kashagawigamog, and minor changes at the Haliburton sewage treatment plant to handle the increased sewage flow. The estimate was based on the cost of similar projects then underway, and was thought by the provincial environment ministry to be realistic. Since then, inflation has averaged about five percent a year, but the projected cost of the Haliburton expansion has tripled, to more than $6 million. Absurd? Incredible? Impossible? That's what Dysart council and local resort owners are telling themselves over and over. A dream that once seemed achievable — a relatively short and technically uncomplicated sewer line to an existing and adequately functioning sewage plant — has turned into a nightmare that haunts every local person who is in any way involved.

Clearly, a great deal of misinformation was promulgated when the project was first proposed, and most of the blame for that must rest directly with the environment ministry. The capacity of the sewage plant was grossly over estimated and the costs and methods of upgrading it were misunderstood. Improvements that three years ago were said to have been possible for less than $100,000 will now cost substantially more than $1 million. And each time local representatives meet with environment ministry officials, newer and higher estimates are laid on the table.

Since the costs appear to be rising almost exponentially with each new delay, and since the need for the line has been acknowledged by the province for at least three years, the obvious question is, why wasn't it built then instead of now? The answer is that the political will was missing three years ago, and it appears that it is still missing today, despite the fact that our MPP is a member of the cabinet. The politicians say the budget is tight, but the truth is that their spending habits are profligate and their priorities askew. A great deal more money has been squandered on one day festivals and advertising subsidies through Destinations East than it would cost to fully fund the Haliburton sewer line, protecting the local environment and facilitating multi million dollar expansion programmes by private enterprise.

Is it any wonder that council and the report owners are frustrated? If the sewer project is abandoned, it won't be local people who are to blame.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Our readers write...

To the Editor:

How do you thank someone for saving the life of a loved one? This is one of the reasons for writing this letter. First, to Mr. Del Calvin of the Sea Gull's Nest Cottage on Haliburton Lake on Friday afternoon July 29 and to the other people who helped rescue him and save our boat. I'm sure we don't know all our names but you know who you are and we thank you most sincerely.

Those whose names were given to us for retrieving our boat were Clarence Howe and R. Hodgson but we know there were others.

Drew, the victim of another boater's irresponsibility, is a lucky young man due to the efforts of these people. He was taken to Haliburton Hospital where he was well looked after by the staff there. The prop of the boat sliced his arm six times. He received 80 stitches to his right upper arm; bruises and lacerations to his back and shoulder, but should have full use of his arm within a few months.

The second reason for writing this letter is to state the facts regarding this mishap due to the wild rumours we have heard.

Drew is 26 years old, has been swimming since the age of 2 and has been operating boats for about 5 years.

This was the second time he had been out alone in this particular boat. He was standing in the boat so he could see his way through the channel which is very shallow. He was thrown from the boat due to a much larger boat coming into the channel over the speed limit, creating a large wake. By the time he was rescued he was exhausted due to panic and his injury, but he is not a non swimmer as was stated by some of the people who helped rescue the boat after the accident.

Unfortunately the person who caused the accident did not even have the decency to stop and aid in the rescue.

Again our heartfelt thanks to all who helped, especially Del Calvin.

Sincerely,

The Bailey Family and Drew Baird

Positive mental imaging joins the medical arsenal

To the Editor:

In a recent article in your newspaper by Martha Perkins relating to the escalating costs of O.H.I.P., Dr. Norman Bottum outlined some of the causes and possible remedies for this serious crisis. Perhaps a few observations based on recent research data may be helpful.

A recent report by a forum of epidemiologists pointed out that life expectancy in the western democracies owed more to improved diet to modern sophisticated medical modalities and drugs.

Research in the causes of cardiac death in Americans and Swedes reinforced the widely held belief that poor diet, smoking, lack of exercise, and alcohol abuse were responsible for 60 to 70 per cent of all cardiac morbidity and mortality statistics. Indeed the lesson to be learned here is that prevention by education could lessen our huge medical bill markedly.

Years ago the medical profession was held in very high esteem by most Canadians. The local doctor was friend, advisor, confessor and someone who was totally dedicated to his patients. With a totally inadequate armamentarium of drugs and procedures, he used the complete faith of his patient in his competence to effect cures by using what we now call "the Placebo Syndrome". Sugar pills often were successful because the patient had a positive and effective mental attitude. Today the use of positive mental imaging is a new but impressive tool for the modern doctor. It has also inspired research into what are known as colony stimulating factors that the body endocrine system produces after the cortex triggers this response. Already synthetic CSF called erythropoietin is undergoing tests in the U.S.A.

Some of the blame lies with the medical profession itself. Fear of litigation has lead too many doctors to overuse and abuse available expensive and

THERE IS NO DOUBT about the fact that when people come back to the Highlands of Haliburton, especially during the summer months, they are looking for something to do while they are here. Up until just recently I must admit that I was one of a group who was of the opinion that when visitors arrived for the summer they wanted to get away from the rat race of the big city, and spend a great deal of their time must taking it easy around the cottage or to spend a lot of time in their boat while others can't wait to hit the road and drive into town to do some shopping and just plain look around. Even this summer, when most days you could cook an egg on the main street, the people still came to town in large numbers. I thought like so many others that people would stay at their cottages and lie on the beach and go swimming. This didn't seem to be the case they still came to town and to be honest with you we are glad they did. There is plenty of evidence that leads us to believe that the biggest majority of our visitors to looking for something to do and something to see. The proof is in the fact that all local events held during the summer and up until it time have been well attended.

According to an article in the Thursday Post those of you who, for one reason or the other, find yourself in Lindsay's courthouse this fall, may recognize a new face. Mike Maher spent three weeks in June serving as a court constable in Lindsay and will return in September for fall sittings. Although he hasn't worked in this area before he brings to the job 23 years of law enforcement experience. On April 16 members of the Ontario Provincial Police and citizens of Minden and area threw Maher a party commemorating his service with the Minden OPP. Maher's duties will consist of ensuring security in the court and assisting the court clerk.

Peterborough MP, Bill Domm, was the guest speaker at the 21st Annual Victoria-Haliburton Federal Progressive Conservative Association barbecue and dance held at the fairgrounds on Saturday. A large crowd was in attendance and the friendly get together plus the good food made for a great day.

In my column last week I mentioned the new wide steps from the highway to the parking lot near the government dock in Haliburton. I forgot to mention that these steps were designed and constructed by Northland Landscaping of Haliburton.

Everyone's talking about the weather and it seems to be a popular subject these days. There was a time when left the city to return to the Highlands to cool off. Unfortunately this year it's as hot in Haliburton as it is in Toronto.

The crowds just keep getting bigger and bigger and the Blue Grass Festival held at Haliburton recently just keeps on getting better and better. It wasn't an easy task for the Royal Canadian Legion and their organizers to get the big show off the ground in the first two years but the large crowds that turned out at the festival this year proves to one and all that the Blue Grass annual event is here to stay. People who attended the show tell me that it was the best ever and that the highlight of the three day event was the music supplied by all the bands, especially the Taylor family who were a big hit with young and old alike. They're still talking about the Step in Time Cloggers who brought the crowd to their feet with their outstanding dancing and perfect timing. When it comes to camping many have told us that the camping facilities in Glebe Centennial Park, home of the Blue Grass Festival, are just as good or better than anywhere in Ontario. I asked a friend of mine how he enjoyed this year's show and he told me that it was tremendous and that he just can't wait until it returns next year.

If enough interest is shown a Conservation Club for Haliburton and area will be formed under the Auspices of the Peterborough Branch of Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters. All those interested in forming such a club are asked to respond to P.O. Box 120, Haliburton, Ontario. If enough interest is shown and enough replies are received a general meeting will be called to form a conservation club and the organizers are interested in receiving recommendations of projects that would benefit the club.

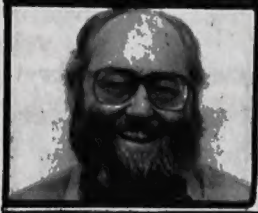

Brant Sisson, who resides at the Parklane Apartments in Haliburton during the winter months and stays at his cottage on Haliburton during the winter months and stays at his cottage on Haliburton Lake in the summer, hasn't lost his love to fishing. Two weeks ago Brant landed a 14 1/2 lb. lake trout and shortly after this he caught a 12 lb. lake trout.

It's been a long time since I've seen Norm Roberts a former resident of Haliburton who at one time ran a successful grocery store business at the corner of Highland Street and Maple Avenue where the present Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce building is located. Norm who was a great friend of my father told me that he now lives in London, Ontario but he still continues to come back in the summer to operate his cottage business on Redstone Lake.

Peanut butter, hold the sugar

Clarke

HAVE YOU EVER ASKED YOURSELF why they put icing sugar in peanut butter? Not an earth-shattering problem, I admit, but one that's been on my mind the last couple of weeks.

During Midnight Madness a couple of weeks ago, my nutritionist daughter treated me to some pure peanut butter on the special offer from the Upstairs Pantry. The kind where you put peanuts in one end of a machine and get peanut butter out of the other.

All the commercial brands seem to have dextrose, or corn syrup, or sugar of some kind added. I can see adding something to keep it from separating, but find no reason to add more sugar to our diets. I'll bet a lot of people don't even know it's there.

The combination of that pure peanut butter and the hot spell we were having took me right back to a summer in my youth, when I was the assistant in the peanut roasting department for IXL Peanut Butter — and a number of other labels from the same outfit in London, Ontario.

It was a heck of a hot summer job when I was in high school, and I much preferred the night shift. But it was a job when I needed it, and it was an interesting process to be involved with.

Peanuts were a bit scarce at the end of the war, with the Indian variety preferred over South American nuts for making butter.

They had to be examined carefully in the processing, because they came shelled, in jute bags, direct from where an Indian family had prepared them. The men gather the nuts and took them to a square marked off for their family.

The wife, presumably with the help of the older children, shelled them and bagged them — and none of them were allowed to leave their little square for the whole day — for any reason.

This fascinating bit of information came as part of my training from my boss, a short, taciturn, pipe-smoking Scottish gentleman, who was responsible for the whole top floor operation, where the nuts were processed ready for grinding.

His main skill was in roasting them properly in rotating gas ovens to the right coloring. I moved the bags to the ovens, shovelled them in, and — when they were done — spread them in little carts to cool.

These had a metal mesh halfway up them. You rolled these carts over to the ovens and emptied the nuts into the top half, then rolled them down the way to plug into a vacuum system that sucked air down through the nuts and the mesh and out of the building.

When they were cooled, a conveyor took them up and dropped them into a centrifugal sorter that spun them at a specific speed. The husks — and anything lighter than a peanut — ended up in bins on the outer edges, where they were bagged up and sold for hog feed.

Anything heavier went to a barrel in the centre, where we collected Indian coins, pieces of cloth, branches and twigs — and all sorts of things — most of which we displayed on the window ledge.

The peanuts — and any twigs, stones and other pieces of matter that weighted about the same — rolled out onto a conveyor belt, moving quickly by four young women who were supposed to pick out anything and everything that was not a peanut, as they rolled relentlessly and monotonously to the end of the belt and were propelled into large wooden bins.

Considering the fact that much of the time there were only three of the four girls on hand — they took turns for various 'breaks' — and the senior one seemed to be able to get away with knitting on the job without making 'Scotty' mad, I guess they did a pretty good job...

When one of the big wooden bins were filled — and I believe they would have been about four feet by five feet by at least three feet high — Scotty or I would take the handle of a broom and dig a couple of holes in the mass of peanuts.

We would then fill a bucket with salt, and pour it into the holes we'd made, stirring it all the while with the broomstick. When the bucket of salt had been spread through the batch, he would signal the okay to the crew on the floor below.

When they needed it, they opened a valve and the freshly roasted nuts fell directly into the grinder, which fed the butter right into the jars. Salt was the only additive, and I think that's the way it should be.

Mind you, there were times, as I was trusted to do more and more — and Scotty cheerful stood around puffing his pipe and did less and less — when we were perhaps more generous than we should have been.

I would be finishing up one step of the process, and realize that the bin was almost full to the top! I'd dash over and switch the flow to the second bin.

Then I'd dig a few holes in the batch, and pour my bucket of salt into it until it was all used up — a couple of gallons worth I guess.

"I put the salt in this batch," I would shout to the boss, over the sounds of the motors and slapping belts that ran all the machinery.

"So did I," Scotty would shout back, shrugging his shoulders and we'd sort of smile at one another. Since then, I guess 'quality control' was invented, so you could be enjoying much better peanut butter today — if they didn't add all the sugary stuff...

Creative envy on the sidelines

SUNNYSIDE UP

Martha
Perkins

THE CURSE OF LIVING in the Highlands, and working here at the same time, is the sense you get of "you can look but don't touch" every spring when the program guide to the upcoming season of the School of Fine Arts is printed. With forlorn wistfulness you read of all these skills you could be learning if only you could take five weeks off work each summer. I know I'll be able to have a glimpse at some of these courses but in effect, that makes it all worse—you're doubly conscious of what you're missing.

For a few days each summer, I make my way up to the high school to interview some of the teachers at the school. I may not know anything about what their profession involves but curiosity takes over when you see what they create. Sometimes, instead of just watching everyone, you want to sit down, pick up a hammer or a string of wool and get down to work with the rest of them.

The level of envy I feel towards those people who can and do take advantage of the School's presence is in direct proportion to the usefulness of whatever they are making. I can appreciate art, but I do not yearn to be an artist. Time and time again the teachers will stress that anyone can learn to tap into their creativity, and that might be true—to a certain extent. But that doesn't really account for the fact that while I admired the students attempting to paint their first portrait, I was keenly interested in seeing how those willow chairs were put together.

Being of a practical nature, I gravitate towards things which are practical. I had interviewed many different artisans before I settled on weaving myself. As I wrote in a previous column, not only is there satisfaction in working with the threads with your hands, but when all is said and done, you have something you can wear, or put on your table, or hang on your windows. And how proud you feel when you can stand back and say "I made that." You find something you can control in a world where everything seems so distant from your reach.

The school allows you to learn of skills which are only being practiced by a small group of people. But those people seem to radiate an eagerness to learn, to branch out and try new things. Ankaret Dean, who made a bird house out of birch bark during one of her lunch hour breaks from teaching basketry; Wesley Harris, who spends hours pounding on a sheet of metal so others won't even know how hard it is to make a brass cup; Marilyn Leonard whose love of colour is knit into art she can wear; Debra and John Phillips, who can take a much-maligned scrub brush and bend it into these beautiful chairs. Their hands are kept busy; their minds are kept active.

You can't leave the school without wanting to... create. Create what, you don't know, but just do something, make something, learn something. Perhaps one day I'll be able to do just that, but until that day arrives, everyone who wants to spend a week in a relaxed hub of creativity should be waiting with bated breath for spring to arrive and bring along with it a new copy of the School of Fine Arts course brochure.

Love matters more than despair

AS OTHERS SEE IT

Bob Giuliano

PEOPLE ARE STILL GETTING MARRIED in spite of the odds! I was just a boy during the "great depression". The 'great depression' was a time of widespread unemployment. Almost everyone was poor and many were hungry. It was not only an economic depression, but a spiritual depression as well. Hopelessness and despair hovered around human hearts. It was also a time of magnificent generosity, of neighbourly love and charity. Thus, it was a time also of great victories of the human spirit over the forces of discouragement and bitterness.

At that time my mother and father were both ministers among seven churches of poor folk. Both mom and dad were licensed to many people and often performed weddings in our little "parsonage", as the Baptists call the home where preachers live.

It was amazing that folks kept married during the depression. The prospects of supporting themselves and the children who were sure to come, were very pessimistic. Nevertheless, in spite of the ominous forecasts of such economic time, young men and women chose to hope and love almost defiantly. They claimed love and hope against the evidence of those impossible times.

Most could afford nothing more than to stand up in the preacher's parlour and make their promises short and to the point. No elaborate costumes, parades or receptions except for the very wealthy. We didn't know any of those. Folks just drove in, knocked on the door of the parsonage, hands shaking, announced their intention and asked if the preacher would "do it" today!

Weddings became a sort of family event at our house. The living room (where kids were never allowed) was the wedding chapel. Flowers from our rose bushes made up the bride's bouquet — usually cut and arranged by "granny" who lived with us. My mother played the piano and sang. Dad said the words. The witnesses were usually scared up from among the neighbours or conscripted visitors at our house. Once a man who had "begged" for food was enlisted to sign and witness after he had finished the fried egg sandwich he was enjoying on the back porch. He cried a lot during the ceremony!

My parents spent as much time as they could to satisfy themselves that each couple was sober and sound of mind before agreeing to the task. They did the best they could in those hard times to discourage fool-hardiness or impulsive unions. Few were turned away. During the depression we all believed in love and that love was stronger than despair or hunger or hopelessness.

Laughter and good humour surrounded each couple as my dad tried to ease their shyness and anxiety. My youngest son, having heard many of his grandfather's stories, performed his first wedding this summer and said to the couple: "My grandfather always said at this point, 'you better kiss your bride before someone else does'."

When the second "great war" came, my mother was the only preacher in the area. She conducted all of those pre-muster weddings, furlough weddings and tearful "going overseas" weddings. Young women and men were being swept out of the hills and valleys by the call to war. To marry during those war years was to face certain separation, perhaps permanent separation. Nevertheless, like the depression folks, people kept denoting themselves to the matters of the heart in defiance of the powers of war and death. They promised to love each other forever in a time of great hatred and fear.

My mother solemnized these marriage promises choking back tears and potential sobs. Her own husband was wounded on an anangio heach and did not come home for five years. She knew the terrible human cost of war and yet joined young lovers prayerfully and hopefully.

Us kids used to hide outside the parsonage and hurl rice to celebrate the unsuspecting couples as they emerged sweating and red in cheek from the simple ceremony. It was lovers at war with the powers of death celebrated by silly children.

Each time in history has its powers of death pitted against love and life. These are times now when the odds against lasting marriages are strong and big. Almost half of the folks don't make it. Yet lovers still get married—sometimes twice.

These are times when the human heart is swallowed up by systems and procedures and materialism. It is a time of appearances and shallow rituals of confusing values and ornery disappointments in all relationships. Yet folks courageously, defiantly—as before—make public their hope in love and promise to serve no other gods than fidelity to e who gave them to each other.

The powers of death are more subtle than war or economic depression. Ole Satan, the adversary of human dignity, the "divider" of human unity is as wily and wise as ever. Yet folks defy his apparent victories over human dreams and still commit to the love in their hearts.

It is one of those great battles of human souls in every generation: to "cherish" persons and to live by the spirit of hope. Love still matters to folks. So do promises.

Snow White without the dwarves

DOWN OUR ROAD

Sharon

"ARE YOU COMING TO Snow White's birthday party?" Deb asked, leaning on the office doorknob. She had just handed out invitations and was all a twitter with excitement.

"Wouldn't miss it for the world," was my response, knowing that Snow White's birthday would indeed be an event.

"Good. I'll see you about seven tonight," and with that Deb spun around and was out the door.

Snow White is a car. Now before you throw up your hands in confusion, let me explain. Snow White was about to turn four years old and every year Deb has had a birthday party for her. A sign of respect, if you wish; the quirk of an original personality, perhaps; an excuse for a party, definitely. Deb is in the kind of business that requires her complete dependence on her car. So she coddles it, talks to it, and has even assigned it a personality. Not surprisingly, Snow White's personality is quite similar to Deb's. Sometimes stubborn, always dependable and able to overcome most any obstacle.

The car is probably the cleanest in Haliburton—inside and out. Over her sleek white body, there is a mesh net of some kind to keep bugs out of her grill. She has customized license plates and nobody, but nobody, drives her except Deb. Snow White can travel any backroad, in any weather. She sneers at winter and always pulls through like a trooper.

Dad had said that Snow White was very excited about her party and was going to have a bath just before it so she'd look her best.

The party was being held at a small resort that Deb owned. As we pulled into the drive, I saw Snow White parked to display her best angle. She was festooned with balloons and streamers made from strips of plastic garbage bags. On her hood was a bow.

I could tell by the voices that the party was already well underway. Rounding the corner to the patio, I saw several smiling faces by poolside, toasting to Snow White's continued good health. It was in fact a pool party, which in the heat was a welcome place to be on any evening.

A little later, I dove into the green water that smelt only faintly of chlorine. It was beautiful night. The day's earlier rain had left a warm mist in the air. The moon had ventured out from the scattering clouds and only a few other bodies could be seen bobbing about in the shallow end. Floating on my back, I contemplated the relationship people had with their vehicles. Only that week, a friend had told me that a car was like a person, with a head, a stomach and feet. The tires, he explained seriously, were like shoes and had to be checked for wear.

"Show me a person who neglects their car or truck and I'll show you a person not in control of their life," he said.

Another fellow, a retired farmer from around Barrie, remarked that you could always tell what kind of a farmer a person was by their truck. If it was clean and orderly, then you knew he had an efficient, well-run farm. Since the man obviously had experience in the field, who was I to argue?

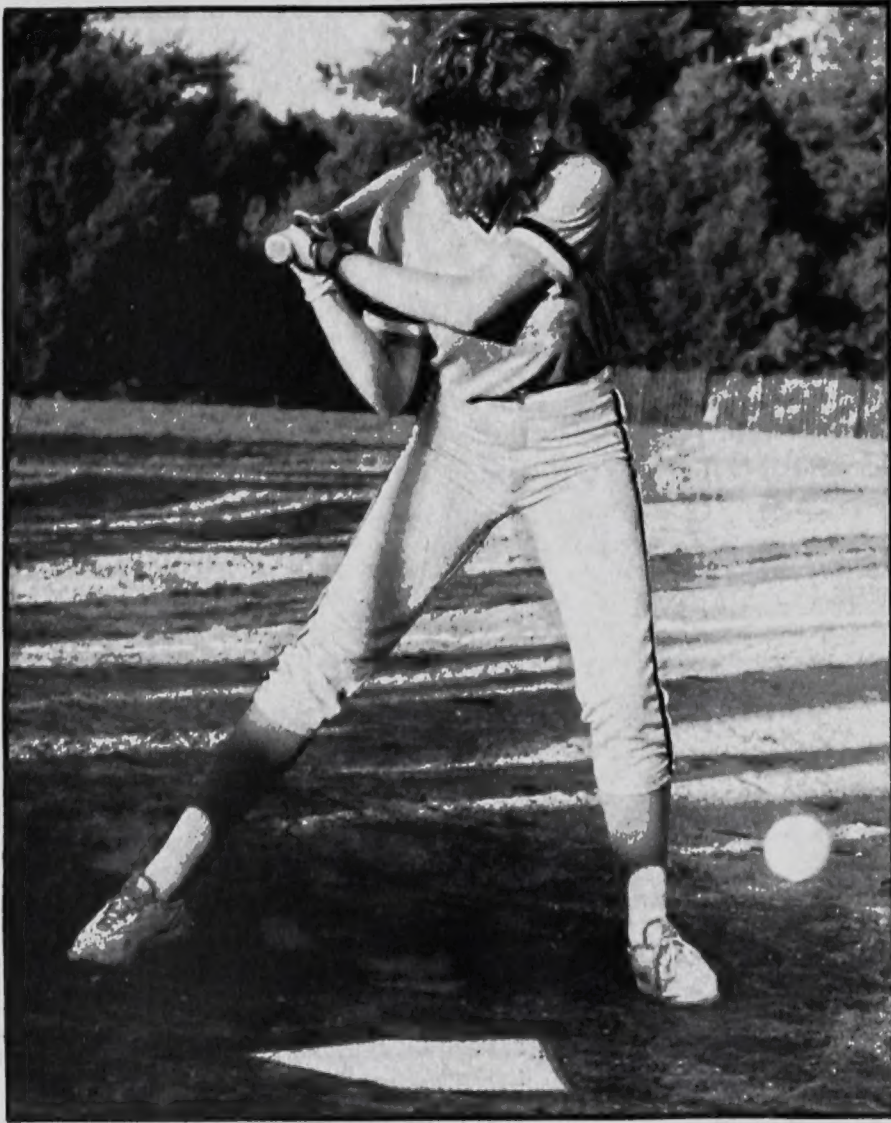

With mosquitoes nipping at our heels, the hardy swimmers grabbed towels and returned to the chairs and picnic table. Pizza had just arrived, to be followed by cake and ice cream in honour of Snow White. We reminisced about last year's birthday party and

Guilford defeats Rockcliffe, on to finals

Terri-Lynn Barry outs a bad pitch in Monday's semi-final game between West Guilford and the Rockcliffe Snack Bar. Barry and her Guilford teammates won 7 to 5 in a heart-stopper which went to the last out. Guilford starts the championship series with Haliburton tonight

"Here we come Haliburton!" That was the battle cry of an elated West Guilford Ladies Softball team on Monday night after they defeated the Rockcliffe Snack Bar 7 to 5 to advance to the Championship series against Haliburton.

Anyone who was at the ball park in Minden Monday night should by now be a qualified diver, since we all held our breathe for close to three innings before the last out was squeezed in this heart stopper.

The game started off slowly and it looked as though it was going to be a defensive game and pitching duel. No runs were scored in the first inning and West Guilford brought in the only run in the second.

Guilford got into a little trouble in the third when a Rockcliffe rally put them in front 3 to 2. West Guilford Tied it up in the fourth when Cheryl Cooper scored.

At that point West Guilford began to pull away, scoring four unanswered runs in the next three innings. Finally the game came down to the bottom of the seventh, Guilford leading 7 to 3 and the Rockcliffe with last bat.

The tension was incredible. Guilford managed to get two outs but pitcher Joan Scott began to show signs of fatigue, after pitching the entire game. The Rockcliffe scored two more runs and put the tying run on first. The crowd was biting their lips and Scott appeared nervous. But as last minute burst of adrenaline helped her get the pitching under control again. The winning run at the plate grounded to a forced out at third and the game was over.

The final score was West Guilford 7 and the Rockcliffe 5. Guilford and Haliburton will now square-off in the Championship series, starting tonight at 7:00 p.m. in Haliburton.

West Guilford and oldtimers play for fun

by MIKE PARK
Staff Reporter

It was a game of poor defense, errors and lackadaisical play. Inconsistent hitting and horrible calls by the umpires only served to make this one of the worst softball games played in Haliburton County.

But, oh boy, it surely was the most fun game ever played.

Last Thursday night there was a reunion of sorts at the ball diamond in West Guilford. A group of "Oldtimers" came out to play a hard game of ball with the West Guilford Ladies Softball Team.

Although the teams started off seriously enough, by the second inning the game had degenerated into a running joke, much to the pleasure of the sizeable audience who gathered to watch. Nancy Oshawa defeated South River in the Championship final to win the Eighth Annual Rockcliffe Invitational Fastball Tournament, held at diamonds in Haliburton and Minden this weekend.

The host Rockcliffe Hustlers won in the consolation final, defeating the Woodville Juniors.

Despite the hot weather, the fans turned out in droves to cheer on their teams and the fastball action. Former teammates Pete Landers and Bob Domik showed they still had what it takes. The crowd was thrilled when Toronto Maple Leaf Gary Leeman took to the field as well.

The Hustlers would like to thank all those who volunteered to help run the event, especially the Haliburton Warriors, who took charge of the games at the Haliburton diamond. And a Special thanks go out to the fans.

A Guilford player is safe on first, amidst sprawling Oldtimers in last Thursday's game in West Guilford. Everyone had a good time, including the players who want to play every year

Imperial system of measure.

Domm admitted that there may be some things about the Conservative government's programs which will bother some people but he thinks that when people cast their vote in the next election and reflect on the last four years, they will remember four successive reductions in unemployment, government spending and inflation and an all-time high in foreign investment.

Haliburton on the way to getting new van

by MIKE PARK
Staff Reporter

It appears that Haliburton County is on its way to getting a special van for the handicapped. Last Thursday night, the Committee for Equal Access met at the Royal Canadian Legion and got the ball rolling.

Peggie Neville, a committee member, says the members met with Murray English of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, to discuss possible funding of the special van which will accommodate wheelchairs. The committee will be meeting to formulate a funding proposal, which it hopes to put to Dysart et al council sometime in the fall.

Neville is confident that they will be able to get the funding for the van from the provincial government. If that comes through, she says, the van could be driving the streets of Haliburton and the roads of Dysart within a year.

"We hope to have it by next spring," she says.

The committee also hopes to raise more money through community fund raising and service groups. Neville says the province and the municipality won't cover all costs. She hopes people will get behind this project as they got behind the Haliburton Hospital Expansion. She points out that the van will cost considerably less than the hospital and is an important community service as well.

The committee formed earlier this summer after an article in The Echo pointed out the need for this kind of a specialized transportation system.

"What good is a protectionist attitude, an attitude of isolationism, the kind of attitude that's being taken by the Liberal Party today? What good is that in a world market condition? It's not worth one cent."

Countries such as Japan and Germany have faith in Canada to compete, market and sell their products. Domm cited the fact that Volkswagen and Nissan were building plants in Canada to sell in the U.S., not vice versa. And this faith in Canada was in evidence while the free trade deal with the Americans was being negotiated.

The support for free trade covers a wide spectrum. Domm said high school students in Peterborough are overwhelmingly in support of, and optimistic about the deal. Domm surveyed the business community in Peterborough and a majority of chief executive officers wrote letters of support for free trade because they feel they can compete.

Domm attacked the Liberal's attitude toward the deal and asked his audience, "What good is a protectionist attitude, an attitude of isolationism, the kind of attitude that's being taken by the Liberal Party today? What good is that in a world market condition? It's not worth one cent."

Then Domm turned his attention to New Democratic Party leader Ed Broadbent. "He says the Auto Pact is okay, but the Auto Pact in free trade is not okay. There is absolutely no logic and when you look at their protectionist, nationalist attitudes about building a wall, there is no future for our young people in that kind of attitude."

Domm said Canada is the only country in the world that doesn't have access to a market of 100 million people and that we, as Canadians, should realize what we are gaining by gaining access to 250 million Americans.

Addressing the concerns people have expressed about the loss of Canada's sovereignty Domm held up the European Economic Community as an example of a functional free trade agreement. "Did Margaret Thatcher begin wearing a French beret?" he asked.

Domm summed up his argument supporting free trade, the issue upon which the next election will be fought, by saying it will raise the standard of living, create jobs and stimulate the economy. He called it one of the greatest pieces of legislation ever and said the best protection for social programs is a strong economic policy.

In order to enact this bill, Domm says the Conservatives need a strong majority government. "We don't need a Liberal/NDP coalition. Let's get Bill Scott back in there. This area is one of the strong holds we don't want to lose. Let's get him into an election campaign."

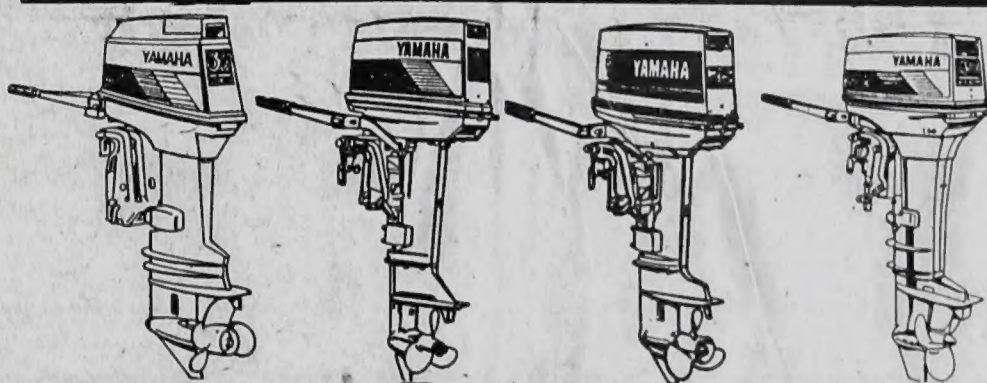

Scott said later that he's never off the campaign trail and mentioned the numerous social functions he's always attending as proof. Free trade is the last major piece of legislation left to pass in the Conservatives program and Scott says the government intends to see it pass before an election is called. He admits the actions of the Liberal dominated senate, who have sworn to block passage of the bill until an election is called, may have an impact on the Conservative's intentions.

He said it depends on the "mood of the house and the timing of the election call." Scott headed back to Ottawa on Monday after Parliament's brief summer recess.

High-flying birthday: Onondaga turns 70

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

Camp Onondaga began the celebrations for its 70th anniversary in a way which outshone the traditional cake with 70 candles. As an airplane flew overhead, the hundreds of campers and staff, dressed in the red and white colours of the camp, took the place of candles as they formed the letters of "ONONDAGA 70TH" on an otherwise empty field. When the photographer in the plane develops the picture, the camp will have a rather novel record of camp life.

This interpretation of the term "body language" was the idea of Betty Fallis-Trow, the camp's first woman director in those 70 years. She organized the campers into letters and co-ordinated their activities with the pilot of the plane.

After the picture was taken, the campers formed a large circle around the field. In an off-tune rendition of Happy Birthday, they sang to the camp's continued success and finished their active role in the ceremonies by singing the camp song.

From there, camp president and owner Nick Florian led the campers to the shores of Middle Bob Lake for a ceremonial planting of an oak tree.

The oak is found on the camp's emblem, signifying the theme of "strength, uprightness and protection." As the young oak was put into the ground with the help of Lutterworth Reeve Bill Valentine, Florian said "We plant our own roots, the roots of life." With the symbol of the oak to guide them, its qualities will be preserved and passed on by the campers.

Wednesday afternoon's ceremonies were just the beginning of the anniversary celebrations. On Labour Day weekend, former campers and staff will re-tell stories of their days at Onondaga during a reunion. Then in October, a dinner will be held in Toronto, matched by dinners in several international cities since camp has been successful in attracting campers from countries around the world including Latin America, Mexico, Germany, Japan and the island of Hong Kong. The Echo will have a profile of the camp in a future edition.

At Onondaga, the oak tree symbolizes the camp's motto of 'Strength, uprightness and protection.' To mark its anniversary, director Andrew Turner helped to plant a young oak for future campers

Fish spawning studied

The Friends of Little Hawk Lake, a private cottagers association, has completed a Ministry of Natural Resources' Community Fisheries Involvement Program (C.F.I.P.) geared to enhance a lake trout spawning area in Little Hawk Lake.

In the fall of 1987, utilizing Sport Fish Licence revenue, the Ministry of Natural Resources located and evaluated previously unknown lake trout spawning areas in several lakes within the Leslie M. Frost Natural Resources Centre boundaries. This study indicated that the lake trout were having little success in reproducing in Little Hawk Lake. The Ministry of Natural Resources recommended that enhancement of the main spawning area by providing better quality spawning rubble could increase the potential reproductive success of the lake trout in Little Hawk Lake.

Don Stewart, a Little Hawk cottager, and coordinator for the Friends of Little Hawk, took the challenge. After consultation with the Ministry of Natural Resources, he submitted a C.F.I.P. proposal to enhance the lake trout spawning area in Little Hawk. Thirteen cottagers supplied 58 man hours to move 24 tons of rock rubble 1.5 miles across the water to the spawning area.

When the work was completed, a visual inspection of the enhanced area by the Ministry of Natural Resources concluded that the spawning area was enlarged as well as enhanced. This fall, the Ministry plans to monitor the spawning area for lake trout use.

Fires at Stanhope's dumps prompting new rules

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

Visitors to Stanhope's dumps next summer can probably expect to find the areas fenced and the hours restricted. There might even be someone on hand to tell them what pile their garbage should go in. Stanhope council has been forced to consider such a move after Fire Chief Bob Nangle reported that in two months this summer, his men have responded to 18 fires at the dump, whereas before, there might have been four dump fires in a year. "These fires are set by..." councillor Jock Mavor asked. "We don't know," Nangle replied. "And it's not spontaneous combustion." The firemen have "taken it upon themselves" to drop by the dumps if they are in the area, Nangle says. At 9:30 at night, everything might be quiet. At midnight, the men get a call saying the dump is on fire.

There's no way the summer's heat can be the cause—someone has to be starting them. "They think they're doing you a favour," he added. People don't realize that burning is illegal, not only as a safety precaution, but also because of environmental concerns. There are a lot of plastics and chemicals in today's garbage, and when they burn, they spark serious problems, such as a depletion of the ozone layer and acid rain. One lakeshore resident pointed out that whenever he saw a fire at the dump, he assumed the township had set it to reduce the amount of garbage which has to be buried. If this was the case, Stanhope would be committing a crime. Most of the fires occur in the summer, when there are more people in the area. Signs which forbid burning are regularly stolen—recently, someone started a fire on the sign. Up until now, the open use of the

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

A group of Brady Lake property owners has sent a letter to Minden township complaining about the condition of the Brady Lake Road.

The letter, signed by 15 people, called the condition of the road "deplorable". The residents claim the road had been graded but, less than two weeks later, the washboarding had returned. They called the grading "a waste of time and money" and said "no benefit had been derived." They believe gravel should be spread on the road to fill in the ruts.

Their vehicles are being damaged, according to the letter, and they feel their "tax money should at least afford (them) satisfactory road conditions. Otherwise," the letter continues, "what are we getting for our tax dollars?"

Accompanying the signatures at the bottom of the letter are individual comments. "Two muffler systems in one year on both our vehicles is absolutely disgusting" says one. "My daughter's car undercarriage was damaged and had to be towed to Toronto due to road condition," reads another. One person summed it up with "two tires gone, two more going."

In responding to the complaints, Minden Road Superintendent Clayton Cameron said Brady Lake Road is graded as much as any other road. The recent dry weather has made road grading fairly ineffectual and it's impossible to keep unpaved roads smooth. Cameron said he has driven over the road and, although he says there is some washboarding in some places, he would not call its condition deplorable. Cameron doubts the road would be responsible for excessive tire wear.

Attendants receive praise

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

Randy Barras and Kirk Norris, two attendants with the Minden Ambulance Service, have received praise from an Air Ambulance Service for their efforts when helping a woman who was trapped under a tree on July 2.

The praise came in the form of a letter which was read out loud at the regular meeting of Minden council last Thursday. Signed by Bryan Justice and Rob Theriault from the Air Ambulance Base in Markham Ontario, the letter stated that as a result of the care provided to the woman by Barras and Norris, the air ambulance team was able to expedite resuscitation and transport the patient within a matter of minutes.

Justice and Theriault called Barras and Norris' assistance at the scene "invaluable" and said their efforts "exemplified the team approach to patient care." They said they would welcome the opportunity to work with the Minden pair again.

Writers meet and exchange prose and poetry

by MIKE PARK
Staff Reporter

Virginia Muenzel reads her works

"It's the tale, not he who tells it," Stephen King once wrote: People might not be famous but it's their works which can capture our attention. That was certainly true in Haliburton on Saturday night when four local writers presented readings of some of their work at the Rails' End Gallery.

There were light hearted tales of river tubing, erie tales of shamans and omens as well as some delightful poetry. All the writers are amateurs who while away their spare time creating prose and poetry. They are all ordinary people with a passion for sculpting with words. Their stories could have been by Stephen King, or H. P. Lovecraft, or Alice Munro, they did have that quality. But this quality of literature generated by ordinary people shows the potential they have to become great writers.

The writers group is a part of the Haliburton Guild of Fine Arts and meets regularly to read to each other and different audiences. On Saturday, 12 people braved the sweltering heat to hear the readings in the air-conditioned Gallery. All were pleasantly entertained.

For more information about the group and when the next reading will be, please contact the Rails' End Gallery at 457-2330.

Fighting dump fires a problem

dump hasn't been abused, but with so much of the firemen's time being spent at the dump, restricting hours of use and having a worker on site may be the only solution to the growing problem.

"The men are getting tired of putting out dump fires," Nangle says. All firefighters are volunteer, and often have to leave their jobs in order to answer a call. Most employers have been very tolerant so far, but when someone has to spend four hours at a dump fire just because of someone's stupidity, that toleration can be stretched—not only on the part of the employers.

"You're not going to get the men going out to them," Nangle warned. "We haven't come down to that yet," but the frustration is mounting.

Oddly enough, all the fires are occurring at the Halls and Maple Lakes sites, and sometimes the men will get one fire out at Maple Lake, when they'll be called to Halls Lake. Pine Springs dumpsite users are obviously more considerate.

The Ministry of the Environment has also received calls about the dump fires and its area representative has echoed Stanhope's suggestion that the area be regulated.

And it is not just Stanhope which is having problems at its dumps either, not to mention the fact that the Halls Lake dump must be closed by the end of next year. In Bicroft, ratepayers have been issued a card and must present it when they want to throw out their garbage during the weekend-only hours. Lutterworth council has been told its sites must all be fully enclosed. Dysart has long had a problem with dump fires, even though its dumps are gated and an employee present during the day.

Ministry informed of need for sewer pansion that was to have been available in preliminary form in May, still has not been made public.

Until the study is completed, it will not be known if the existing plant can be expanded and additional discharge pumped into Grass Lake, or if a new plant would be required elsewhere to handle sewage from the resorts and other commercial properties on Highway 121 and the north side of Lake Kashagawigamog.

The province has said it will pay 75 percent of the cost of the forced main sewage line, and 81 percent of any plant expansion costs. But the remaining portion, which must be shared by the commercial property owners, already appears to be higher than many, if not all of them, could finance, even if projected profits from future expansion the line will facilitate are taken into consideration.

While no clear alternative to the project and its present funding structure have been proposed, it is hoped the meeting will make Bradley aware both of the pressing need for the sewer line, and of the daunting financial burden facing resort owners under the present proposal.

Minden property exempted from flood plain

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

A Minden man may have his property exempted from the designated floodplain because an engineering firm has determined that by placing fill on his land, it will not be subject to a regulatory flood.

Paragon Engineering determined that Angelo Falzon's property, located on the north side of the Gull River near the sewage treatment plant, can be elevated above the Gull River floodway.

Minden's municipal planner, Robert Lehman, was informed of the findings and in a letter to Minden council suggested that council proceed through an Official Plan Amendment as proposed by the Special Policy Area Study.

The amendment has yet to be approved by the Ministry of natural Resources and Ministry spokesman Brian O'Donahue says it has to be determined whether or not the placement of fill on the property will have an off-site impact.

The MNR has said that the placement of fill on a property is not necessarily a solution to the floodplain designation. Elevating a property can increase the amount of flooding on neighboring properties.

O'Donahue says the Ministry has handled cases where properties were elevated without any adverse off-site impact but these instances are the exception rather than the rule.

A spokesman for Paragon says less than a meter of fill is required to elevate Falzon's property above the floodplain. Paragon's study concluded that the placement of fill would not have a significant effect on neighbouring properties.

The MNR will examine the rezoning application and, if the placement of fill results in significant off-site impact, the ministry will recommend to the municipality that the application be refused.

Allsaw celebrates corn

by MIKE PARK
Staff Reporter

Mmmm mmmm! Hot, steaming, golden and delicious. That's the only way to describe Camp Allsaw's session-ending corn roast on Friday.

For the kids and staff, the corn roast is the culmination of their summer's work at Allsaw. All the corn has been grown by the campers on their home made "supersoil", part of Camp Allsaw's programme of conservation and recycling, says camp director and founder, Samuel Hambly.

The campers and staff picked and husked their own corn right off the stalk and then dropped it in the pot. Talk about fresh corn on the cob. They also got chili and hot dogs. And, as always, all the scraps were taken to the compost pile to make "supersoil" for next year's corn roast.

"Supersoil", Hambly explains, is the composted remains of organic waste, such as leaves, husks and peels of all sorts—a super enriched top soil which can be used for gardening and farming.

The results of using supersoil have been incredible. Last year, Camp Allsaw grew a sunflower 11 feet, 1 inch high using the remarkable compost. This year, they have grown a good crop of sweet corn, despite the summer drought which wiped out similar crops all across Ontario. Hambly says the richness of the supersoil in vitamins and minerals from its organic origins helped Allsaw's crop resist that devastating drought.

Supersoil is produced by composting leaves, corn husks, bean pods and just about any other organic waste. When the waste decays, it produces a vitamin rich compost that, when mixed with soil, produces soil with enhanced growing quality.

Producing supersoil is part of Camp Allsaw's concentration on ecology, the environment, and conservation. The campers learn about nature and how to recycle and use nature to help produce food, naturally. Hambly hopes that some day the techniques taught at Allsaw will help feed the world's hungry.

But the kids seemed unconcerned about these lofty intentions on Friday. They were just enjoying a good corn meal.

These three campers from Camp Allsaw husk their own corn, fresh from the stalk, as they prepare for the camp's annual Corn Roast. Judging from the number of people around the pot, left, the event is pretty popular.

Water levels down again

The water stored in Haliburton area lakes of the Trent-Severn Waterway averaged 58.2 percent on Monday, August 8. This was a decline of 3.3 percent from Tuesday, August 2. The 10-year average for this date is 71.7 percent while in 1987 the levels averaged only 58.7 percent. Tributary flows from these lakes via the Gull, Burnt, Nogies, Mississauga, Eels and Jack streams have been kept very near minimum again this week.

This season has been very hot and much drier than normal in most areas of Canada. Along the Trent-Severn these conditions are resulting in decreased levels and flows. Recent rains have only had a minor moderating effect so far.

Teachers find Haliburton a 'wonderful place to work'

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

WHEN IS SCHOOL more like recess? When is teaching more like learning? And when does work seem more like getting together with friends to share ideas, inspirations and memories? For Marilyn and John Leonard, the answers are to be found at the School of Fine Arts.

"It's absolutely a wonderful place to work, I can't say enough about this place," rhapsodizes Mr. Leonard, whose 17 years of teaching at the school have done nothing to dampen his enthusiasm. "This is something wonderful we're all sharing."

It's the type of school where there are no barriers, whether between teachers, teachers and staff or teachers and students. There's just too much to do and learn to waste time on pettiness and rivalry; it's just too relaxed an atmosphere to incite any type of discord.

The welcoming sense of camaraderie dispels any distinctions and it's impossible to differentiate the artists from the weekend doodlers who don't care what the critics say as long as they're having fun. The teachers don't have to prove themselves and the students have nothing to lose, only everything to gain. That's how, as you peer into classrooms, an electric current of creativity generates the enthusiasm the Leonards echo.

"There's no loss of status for an instructor to take a course. It's not an elitist kind of situation," Mr. Leonard says. "The staff is the most competent, efficient and most humane. I think there is also a sense of belonging. We have a vested interest in making this work."

An argument for learning

Indeed, it is Mrs. Leonard who can present a strong argument in favour of instructors sitting on the other side of the lectern. When her husband was first asked to teach at the school, they had a one-year-old child and a second to follow the next year. They'd pack up their possessions in the car, head up to the Irondale cottage where Mrs. Leonard has spent the last 40 summers and use the excuse of a teaching position to spend some time in the Highlands. As the children grew older, she too could spend her weeks at the school, but with all the responsibilities of home, she enjoyed the no-strings-attached life of a student until five years ago, when she too began teaching.

"I had much more fun taking courses," says the graduate of the Ontario College of Art. Yet she also admits that "nothing teaches you more than teaching." The students absorb the theory but then translate it into their own way of thinking, asking questions which make the teacher "look at it in a way you hadn't seen before. You learn from the process. There's also a lot of exchanging of ideas and a certain kind of admiration for what other people are trying to do." Whether you are a painter, weaver, potter, smith or knitter, there's an increased awareness of technique and determination. One of the favourite past-times at the school seems to be wandering from class to class, peering in to see what the smiths are hammering, the potters are shaping or the designers are wearing.

A week at the school, surrounded by all of these people who are devoted to their craft, "confirms the worthiness of doing this for your whole life," the Leonards agree. The interaction lends itself to a rejuvenation of instincts and talents.

"It's a very high intensity thing so people saturate themselves while they're here," Mr. Leonard says of the courses which are the equivalent of a 15-week night-school program. As well, by being able to spend a whole day doing nothing but learning, students are "more focused. Normally your activities are broken up by your other commitments."

In order to teach his four or five courses each summer, Mr. Leonard needs a lot of rejuvenation himself if he wants his energy level to match his students'. They arrive at the school fresh and raring to go for this condensed week of learning; Mr. Leonard must sustain his enthusiasm from one week to the next, giving as much to his first-week students as he gives to his last.

He first started at the school with one multimedia course and a lot fewer students. Then the school wanted to start a life drawing course and needed someone who could ease the way into this sometimes-embarrassing introduction to staring at nude models all day. "They wanted to make it work because it was an area where people feel a bit nervous at first," Mr. Leonard's life drawing course has been a success ever since.

A growing course load

As the school's reputation grew, so did Mr. Leonard's work load. A children's program came next and contrary to what some people would assume, "it's not occupational therapy." Courses are geared down to a child's level but they are approached just as seriously, albeit with a few ghost stories told to stir up the imaginative juices. Now the teachers hired by the school are among the best at working with children, allowing themselves to be child-like but not childish in their approach to reaching young minds. "You can have fun and be serious at the same time."

A new venture this year was a history course looking into the works of the Old Masters so the students of today could understand the trends and techniques of yesterday. From renaissance to impressionism to abstraction "we start with the masters of 1450 and go through the steps one at a time so you know the history behind it."

Mr. Leonard feels it's important not to look at art in isolation; there is so much background, tradition and history behind each piece, to understand it in today's terms only would do it a disservice. You can't just do what the instructor does either; if an instructor said "you have to do it this way", there would be little difference between that and paint-by-numbers. The individuality would be gone. People must recognize how their own personalities come into the picture, as well as their cultural roots.

In Japan, rock gardens have been a form of artistic expression for centuries and their language doesn't categorize what is art and what is craft. To them, they have two words to express it all: "One means art with a function and the other means art without a function and they both are treated as equal."

"In our culture, (the distinction) has evolved because we have this tradition of looking for expertise." If we need something wired, we hire an electrician; if we need something artistic to fill an empty space in the living room, we "hire" and artist. "In many primitive cultures there was no word for artist because no one had that function. Everybody did the decorative part. All things are vehicles for artists and there's as much ennoble-

BUSINESS NEWS

Restoring the past:

A long time hobby becomes a business

by MIKE PARK

Staff Reporter

SOMETIMES AN OLD HOBBY can become the perfect business. Ask Maggie Longworth. She's turned her love for fixing up antique wicker furniture into a promising new business called The Wicker Works.

The Wicker Works will refinish or rebuild any kind of wicker furniture. In 15 years of working with wicker, Longworth has never come across a piece she couldn't restore.

Most of the furniture she works with dates from between 1870 and 1920 and she likes to give old furniture a second life—almost restoring beauty and history.

"It is so interesting," she says. "Every piece is so different."

Longworth likes to use as many original materials as she can when restoring furniture, to keep it as authentic as possible. She will spend anywhere between 20 and 30 hours to restore a piece of furniture but the time doesn't matter—it is a labour of love. Despite all that hard work, she says her prices are reasonable. Her only competition is a wicker supply company in Toronto but that company's prices are outrageous, she says, because they don't want to do repairs, just supply the materials. That gives the Wicker Works the lion's share of the Central Ontario market.

Vandals hit washroom

by JAY KERR-WILSON

Staff Reporter

Minden councillors are fed up with the abuse of the public washrooms at the Minden fire hall.

At last Thursday's meeting, council expressed its concern and disgust because people have been lighting fires and using the sink instead of the toilet. The abuse has rendered the washrooms unusable in some cases.

Deputy-Reeve Bern Berry said that the township intends to prosecute anyone caught vandalizing the facilities and, if the situation persists, the washrooms might have to be closed.

The washroom is locked between 8:00 p.m. and 6 a.m. so the damage is being done during the day.

Berry said that by closing times some days, the washrooms are in such a mess they can't be used by legitimate patrons. Reeve Sinc Nesbitt called the situation a shame and said the perpetrators "must be caught."

Amazingly, all Longworth's skill is self-taught. She began working with wicker 15 years ago when she first moved to the Gooderham area. She learned a little from the man she rented her house from, who repaired and restored all kinds of furniture. She also taken courses in wicker working and weaving at Sir Sandford Fleming School of Fine Art in Haliburton. From there, it grew from a hobby to a love and now a business.

In May, she decided to earn some money with her hobby and opened the Wicker Works. She got started with a loan from the Haliburton County Development Corporation and it looks like its investment will pay off.

Longworth says she is making a little money this summer even though she didn't expect the business to really get going until next year. Things will slow down in the fall because she has yet to install a heating system in her workshop, but once next winter comes along, she hopes to go year-round.

Her work is becoming known, too. She has customers from all over Central Ontario and Toronto. She is even restoring a couch and set of chairs for a man in South Carolina.

With all the restoration she's done, Longworth says the hardest challenge is the wicker partition wall she is currently working on for a local customer. It's large and started from scratch, but she's almost finished it.

Longworth chuckles that there is only one drawback with working in a business that's also your hobby—she has a shed full of antique furniture of her own that she hasn't had a chance to work on.

Maggie Longworth, owner and operator of The Wicker Works, builds a wicker partition wall in her shop just south of Gooderham. She says this project is the hardest one she's worked on in the last 15 years of restoring and repairing wicker furniture.

Development corp. creates industry forecasting the success of an enterprise.

Campbell also has to ensure the client will be able to pay back the HCDC loan. With a yearly budget of only $400,000, one bad loan can jeopardize the future of the corporation.

Last year the HCDC approved 17 loans totalling $353,000. Of the 17, seven loans were used to start new businesses, seven were needed to expand existing businesses and three were used by people who bought a business which was already in operation.

Tourism related operations received one third of the investment funds, and construction, trade, service and manufacturing all received between 15 and 20 per cent.

The investments allowed for 30 new jobs to be created in the county, 11 of those being in the manufacturing field and 10 in tourism.

Minden, Dysart, Sherborne and Lutterworth were the most active municipalities, each receiving about 20 per cent of the funds.

Since the investment program began two years ago HCDC loans have helped create 94 jobs and have helped business initiatives in every municipality except Bicroft.

The next two years will be critical in determining the future of the HCDC according to Campbell. The loans made in year one will be three years old and three years is how long it will take to see if the businesses which owe the corporation money will be successful or not. Of all new businesses, 75 per cent fold before they reach the age of five. The success of the HCDC depends on the success of its clients, "if they're in trouble, we're in trouble," says Campbell.

But he plans to avoid trouble by keeping in touch with his clients and monitoring their progress. "If you're not on top of the books you're beat," Campbell says the HCDC doesn't just lend a company money and walk away. He continues to work with clients and tries to help them stay in the black, for the good of the corporation as well as the good of the customer.

The next 10 years will be very interesting as far as the economic development of the county goes. Campbell predicts that more land will be zoned for industrial use to accommodate the influx of light manufacturing firms. He also sees an expansion of senior citizen developments as Haliburton's role as a retirement community continues to increase. Muskoka is just now reaching its capacity and Haliburton is benefiting from the resultant spill-over effect. Campbell believes this trend will continue and increase.

Municipalities should begin attracting light manufacturing and industry and diversifying their economies. With proper economic development Campbell says the seasonal tourist trade and the year-round manufacturing industry could complement each other.

Just one project in many

The profile is just one project that will aid in the diversification of Haliburton's economy. By letting businesses know what the county has to offer and by attracting more varied ventures to the area, the county will be able to execute an economic development which will be in keeping with our commitment to the environment and rural lifestyle but at the same time minimize the seasonal nature of a strictly tourist-based economy and ensure an acceptable level of employment for the steadily growing population.

Area residents are "sick and tired" of low lake levels

by MIKE PARK
Staff Reporter

WATER LEVELS IN Haliburton lakes have reached the lowest point in memory. But surprisingly, cottagers and local residents don't seem to be complaining as much as they did last year.

Brad Hartin, the Acting Area Manager for the Trent-Severn Waterway, says water levels, as of last week, are 3 per cent lower this summer than they were last year at this time. When you consider the Waterway's report that the area lakes started out the year 20 percent higher than last year, the lakes have lost an incredible amount of water.

The culprit, says Hartin, has been the lack of rain in the early part of the summer. With the high temperatures, much water which was in the lakes was lost due to evaporation.

"We haven't drawn a great deal of water," he claims. "We're operating at minimum levels."

There have been surprisingly few complaints from lake dwellers this year. Hartin believes this year's computerization of the waterway and the ongoing post-audit of the system are the reasons for the lack of an outcry. He says people are giving the new improvements to the system a chance to work.

But Jerry Strickland, a member of the Haliburton Highlands Water Levels Advisory Committee and a cottager on Miskwabi Lake, says that just isn't so. The Trent-Severn hasn't received a lot of complaints, he points out, but he, as a member of the water levels committee, has.

He does agree that the lack of rain may be a contributing factor and that this is part of the reason some people aren't complaining, but he says there are still a fair number of people upset.

Charlie Robinson, treasurer for the Hawk/Hall's Cottagers' Association, says people in his association are very upset by the levels. He agrees that evaporation accounts for some of the extra water loss, but not all of it.

"The people up here are sick and tired of it," he says angrily, repeating a claim he made last summer in The Echo, when he warned 'we're up here for two reasons: the water and the air. Without the water, we're not going to come.'"

This year, as in past years, the levels in Big Hawk Lake have dropped nearly 7 feet. Robinson says the people of Big Hawk are fed up because the continuous drop in water is causing property damage.

John Perkins, Jr., believes the Trent-Severn broke a promise made to them earlier this year not to let Big Hawk drop more than 7 feet. He thinks the lake has dropped much more than that. As a result, he says, channels are now too shallow for boats which have tried to make it through.

"There's a lot of damage done to motors," he says.

He thinks less people are complaining this year because they are waiting, believing that something is being done.

Strickland doesn't think anything is being done by the Trent Severn. He says the new computer control system and post-audit won't help reduce the drop in levels noticeably. The computer can only change the system by inches, not by the feet the cottagers and lake dwellers demand.

"It doesn't solve the real problem," he says. "The bottom line is that there isn't enough water."

He would like to see the more lakes added to the Trent Severn Reservoir system. That means the draw of water would be spread to a greater number of lakes and reduce the water level drop at some of the hardest hit lakes, such as Big Hawk.

He would also like to see the public get involved and force the province to take part a reform of the system. Similar public pressure forced the province to answer concerns of the residents of Lakes Huron and Erie about rising lake levels. So far Ontario has refused to enter the debate, saying the Trent Severn is Federal jurisdiction.

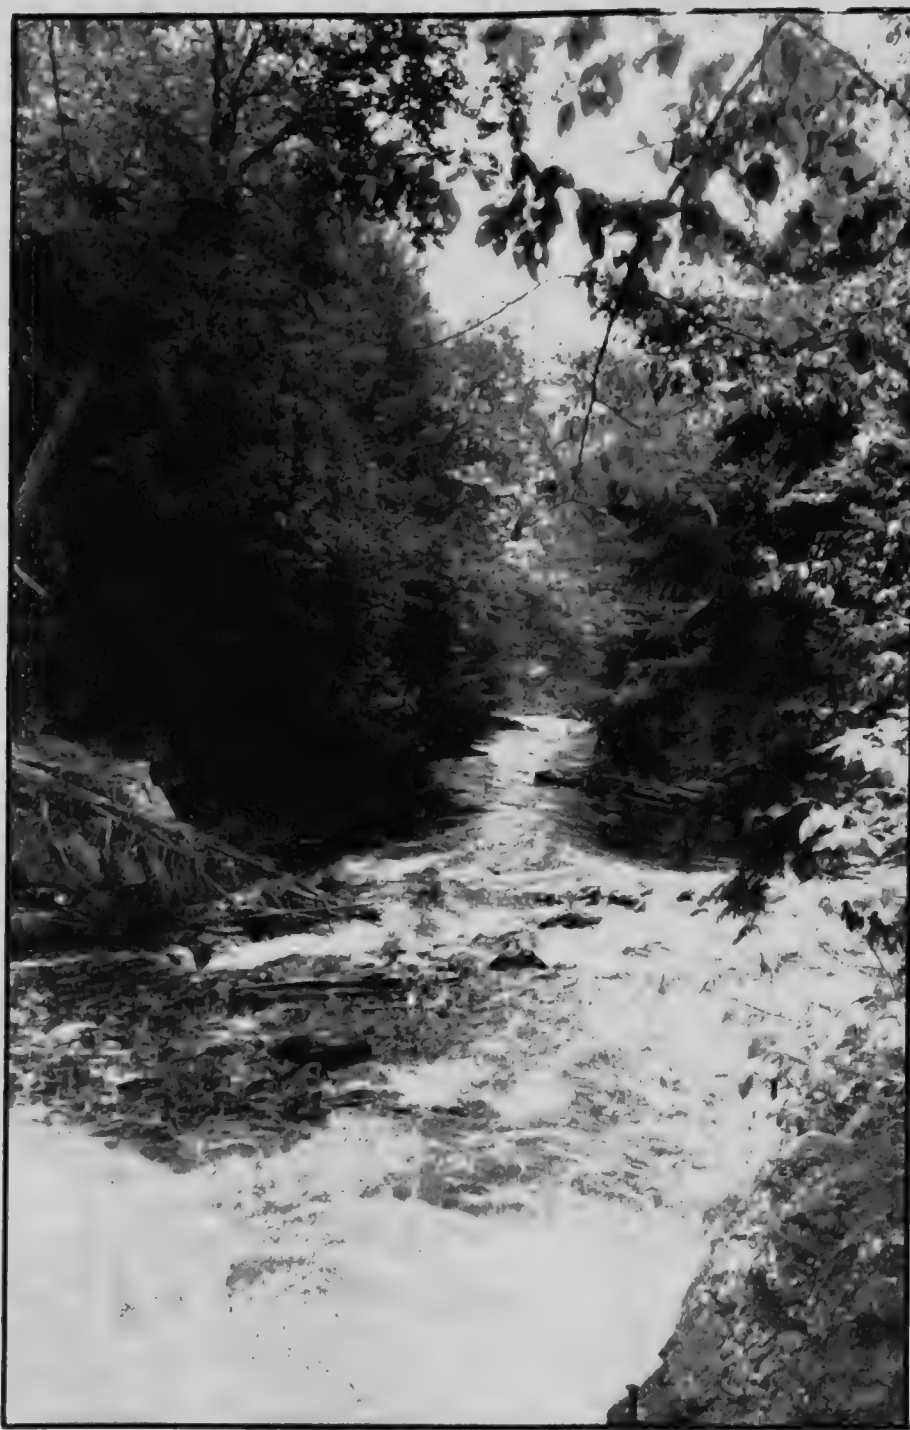

"We've got to shake the cages in Queen's Park," insists Strickland. "The province has got to get more involved."

He wants to the locals "get up in arms" about the situation and the local papers keep up the pressure through scathing editorials.

While Strickland wants to see the Ontario government take a hand in the problem, Robinson thinks the township of Stanhope should get actively involved. He thinks that they, as an organized political body, could do more to help out the cottagers. He says his cottagers' association may go so far as a tax revolt against the township in order to force them to do something. Next year, Hall's/Hawks cottagers may, as a group, withhold their property tax payments in order to get the township to do something.

"We're paying a lot more taxes than lakes that don't lose water," he says.

But Harry Davis, Reeve of Stanhope Township and Chairman of the HHWLAC, says that before you cut back on the draw down from Hawk Lake, you have to see how it will effect the lakes downstream. And to do that, the HHWLAC has

Feeder streams like this one can't keep the lakes filled up. The local Trent-Severn office says lake levels are 3 per cent lower than last year at this time. Blame is placed on the drought but area residents continue to say the TSW is drawing too much water. They want more reservoir lakes asked for a computer simulation, one of the perks the post audit was supposed to create. Davis believes the information is now ready but has yet to be sent to the committee.

As to pressuring the township to do more, Davis says the pressure should be placed on the shoulders of someone whose government is more in a position to do something: "It has to come down to our man—that's where (Conservative MP) Bill Scott comes in. We can't even get him to a meeting."

At the last meeting of the HHWLAC, attention once more turned to the issue of reservoir capacity. The committee has come up with numerous suggestions about what swamps could be flooded or storage areas increased, the problem is getting the government to even consider them.

"This involves an awful lot of money and time," he says. "It would take a lot of study and a lot of work," something the federal government says it doesn't need to do because the waterway's mandate is being fulfilled.

Davis agrees that the cottagers have a right to get angry at the present situation—he's been angry about it for years. The computer changes suggested by the Acres International post audit have stabilized the draw down to a certain extent, "but that doesn't bring it up to the levels we need, by any means."

"As far as having any power, all we can do is lobby as strongly as possible."

DOWN OUR ROAD

Sharon Lynch

though none of us would say so, wondered about next year's. So much can happen in a year. A dint here, a scratch there. Maybe even a flip or a head-on. No one likes to think about them, but they do happen.

Driving home along Highway 35, I thought of two stories that seem to say something about people, their cars and fate's sly hand.

The first was about Lizzie. Lizzie was my parents' car and they claimed it was the best one they ever had. Hardly a day would pass that my mother didn't give Lizzie an affectionate little pat as she walked by. But time wore on and Lizzie was replaced by a new, shinier model and Lizzie became the second car. Then when my sister gave birth to her son in the heat of a Toronto July, my father decided to give Lizzie to her and her young husband. "So they can take that young son of theirs and get out of the city this summer," he said to my mother. "Let's just pray Lizzie get them through to September."

Well, my sister and her husband had Lizzie for seven years. Finally they had to buy their own station wagon. It's amazing how much room you need with a child, a dog, several cats, suitcases and miscellaneous items all going to a Haliburton cottage. They had hoped against hope that they would be able to keep Lizzie. "She's such a good car," my sister told me over coffee. "She has a great engine and her body is in perfect shape. They don't build them like Lizzie anymore." However, since there was only space for one car at their downtown Toronto home, Lizzie had to go. But they made sure she went to someone who would appreciate her and she brought top dollar for her qualities. My sister still talks about her to this day.

The second story came to mind as I drove by the very spot it had happened. It was a sharp, long curve on Highway 118 and another sister was driving home late one night after visiting friends on Canning Lake. Suddenly a deer darted out onto the highway. She swerved to avoid hitting it and went off the road and over an embankment. It was her parents' car, almost brand new and the first real luxury car they had ever owned. But it was untested, an unknown factor in the family at that point.

Some passing motorists found her wandering dazed at the side of the highway and brought her back to the cottage. The story came out later. The car had smashed through the guard rails and slammed down the rock embankment to stop against a huge granite outcropping. My sister, though to this day she doesn't remember actually doing it, had then turned off the ignition, opened the door and climbed back up the side of the road to the pavement. Except for ripped clothes, a few scratches and bruises and being in a state of shock, she was unhurt.

The next day, she stood by an OPP officer who watched as the tow truck strained to pull the car backup out of that gully. The officer shook his head, saying he was sure on one could have got out of such a crash alive. But what he couldn't understand was why the car hadn't exploded on impact. As the crane pulled the car closer, my sister could see that its whole frame was twisted and warped out of shape. The car was a write-off. Yet my sister was unhurt.

Have you ever watched the old "Twilight Zone" reruns on TV? Have you ever given your car a birthday party? Do you ever talk to your car or truck, encourage it over a steep hill or coax it into life on a cold January morning?

The next day at the office I was talking to another party goer on the phone. He had left early due to prior commitments and wanted to know how the evening had ended. I told him he had missed the best part, that Snow White had decided to go for a swim in the pool and that Deb had new water wings all ready for her. "Snow White put them on, skipped across the diving board and made a pretty good swan dive into the water," I recounted. There was dead silence on the other end of the line, then an uneasy laugh. "Yes, Snow White had a great time last night," I continued, "But she had one heck of a hangover this morning."

Oldtimers have fun

Brink displayed some of the pitching style which helped her win a few all-Ontario Championships and the whole West Guilford team showed the speed and offensive ability that has them in the middle of the race for the county softball championship.

After that, everyone switched positions, proving once and for all that under no circumstances should a pitcher play second base. The game was interrupted at one point by an Oldtimer carrying a pair of pin-striped pants and jacket, claiming they were "taking their suit to court."

The umpire joined in the antics before a while, often pausing for the crowd's reaction after making a call. The game was one laugh after another, for the players as well as the fans.

Organizer Nancy Brink says the game was such a hit with everyone involved that they would like to make it an annual event to raise money for the community or the ball team.

Business debate emotional dispatching and accounting is carried out. We also understand that the mailbox is marked 'Minden Electric.'"

"Where do you stop? Where do you draw the line between what you allow and disallow," asked Schlotter.

"Each one is dealt with on its own merit," replied Reeve Harry Davis, who re-stated Council's view that Stewart's use of the property is in compliance with the zoning by-law. When the argument became more general in its comments, with Schlotter saying perhaps this is just one instance of the township allowing improper use of the property and that he was afraid his property would be devalued because of the business use, Davis stressed "the question is whether Mr. Stewart has contravened the by-law... We have to get the opinion of a solicitor."

Council was also interested to know how the cottagers had determined that Stewart was running his business from his home. Ann Barker, whose husband owns Don Barker Heating, asked whether the cottagers would think her husband was at the Stewart's on business if he arrived in his company truck, when in fact he would just be making a social call. (The Barkers also run their business from their home but it is in a commercial zone.)

"What we are concerned about is a precedence being set which would change the nature of the area," said Carroll, who with the others, is also concerned the road will be damaged because of the traffic generated to and from the Stewart's.

The cottagers and the lawyer brought to attention an agreement the developer of the road established, restricting the presence of any building "to be used for the purpose of any profession, trade, manufacture or business." These restrictions are in effect until 1992.

Bain is not sure whether the municipal zoning by-law would over-ride any private development plan. The other question is whether the developer's plan is only binding for new properties being built. The municipal solicitor and planner can determine the legality of Home Occupation Use, but the other matter would have to be resolved by the private parties involved, perhaps through a civil action.

"The part we find most embarrassing is that we have been put in this position," said Catherine Carroll. "We've been forced to take a stand against a neighbour. It causes dissension and forces us to be unpleasant which we never wished to be."

if there were any hydro poles, they were soon delivered.

This spring, Stewart started work on the Bayshore property, pouring a cement basement for the cottage which was already there, putting an addition onto the cottage, and building the storage areas. When summer arrived and business picked up, he had less time to work on the finishing touches—such as the landscaping and the doors which will go on the garage.

For cottagers to see what was happening on his property, Stewart says they would have to stop and peer through the trees. His driveway is

'The part we find most embarrassing is that we have been put in this position,' say the cottagers. 'We've been forced to take a stand against a neighbour. It causes dissension and forces us to be unpleasant which we never wished to be'

A son of one of the cottage owners was particularly unpleasant, Stewart said in a telephone interview after the meeting, at which he was also present. The young man was wandering about the Stewart's property and when Stewart introduced himself, Stewart says the visitor started off on a tirade about how everyone on the road "hated" him and you'd have to be an "idiot" to have a business tied to your house. What made the diatribe even more offensive, Stewart adds, was the way the young man liberally sprinkled his conversation with four-letter words starting with the letter "F". The young man refused to leave until Stewart said he would phone the police.

Stewart believes the complaining cottagers haven't given him a fair chance to address their concerns. He moved to Bayshore Road from Jordan Drive, where he also had a storage area for his business. No one there complained, he said, because he always kept his property tidy and the fourth off the highway, approximately half a mile away, and four delivery trucks drop off supplies each week. Because of the radio, his employees do not need to make several trips to the house to hear of phone messages and assignments. The one or two hydro poles are the only things stored outside.

"They have their cottage guests and friends coming in" during the weekend, Stewart says of the complaint his use of the road will damage it more than the cottagers will.

Should the cottagers get their way, Stewart says "that means every carpenter, plumber, heating man who has anything delivered to his house can't do that anymore."

Much of the problem could have averted, he added, with a little patience. Sometime within the next two years, "but not right now because I'm not ready," he is planning on putting an addition onto his building in Minden where he will store the supplies in the future.

Reprint of the August 4, 1988 Editorial in The Globe and Mail:

With the tariffs off

The heart of the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement lies in the final removal of tariffs, fees, quotas and many other restrictions on the sale of goods and services across our border. This plain fact is often missed in the heat of other controversies. The main outcome of the free trade agreement is — free trade.

A tariff is a federal sales tax on imported goods. It tends to be regressive, hitting lower income families harder than wealthier ones, and is levied on many things required by everyone, often at high rates. Free trade will eliminate Canadian border taxes on all U.S. imports over the course of 10 years. For example:

The 19.7 per cent tariff on clothing. The 20.7 per cent tariff on leather footwear. The 15.6 per cent tariff on rubber footwear. The 13.1 per cent tariff on household furniture. The 15 per cent tariff on textile bags and canvas products. The 10.1 per cent tariff on toilet preparations. The 8.7 per cent tariff on major electrical appliances, radios and television sets. The 8.4 per cent tariff on soaps and cleaning products. The 6.5 per cent tariff on hardware and cutlery. The 9.5 per cent tariff on fruit and vegetable products.

Tariff removal will also force Canadian manufacturers of similar goods to cut their domestic prices, either by taking smaller profits or by improving productivity. Some may even go out of business if their costs remain fundamentally high.

This is why groups such as the Consumers Association of Canada support the free trade agreement — because ordinary Canadians will save money and enjoy better selection. The CAC is unhappy because the agreement doesn't go further by abolishing Canada's monopoly marketing boards for chickens, turkeys, milk and eggs, for example, which keep some Canadian prices relatively high.

Of course, the United States also taxes many Canadian imports, though U.S. tariffs are only half as high on average as Canadian ones. All these U.S. border taxes will be removed. For example:

The 10.9 per cent tariff on clothing. The 8.8 per cent tariff on plastic and synthetic resins. The 4.1 per cent tariff on scientific and professional equipment. The 22.3 per cent tariff on rubber footwear. The 8.6 per cent tariff on leather products. The 10-15 per cent tariff on fish sticks.

Free trade will make many Canadian goods more competitive in the U.S. market. It may also encourage more secondary processing in Canada, because U.S. tariffs tend to be considerably higher on finished goods than on raw materials.

True, abolishing Canadian tariffs deprives some Canadian firms of indirect public subsidies. On the other hand, abolishing U.S. tariffs removes financial penalties on many Canadian exports. In general, Canadian business has responded by choosing opportunity over protection, and vigorously endorses free trade.

The agreement will also phase out a U.S. customs user fee levied on all Canadian goods (currently 0.17 per cent of the value of transactions). This will save Canadian exporters tens of millions more each year. Some quantitative restrictions will be abolished (such as Canada's prohibition on imported used cars and aircraft). And customs procedures will be simplified to ease trans-border commerce.

Governments in both countries may have to compensate for lost tariff revenue by raising other taxes. But virtually all reputable studies forecast income and employment gains from abolishing tariffs. And history strongly suggests that extra economic growth more than pays the freight for freer trade.

The heart of this agreement — abolition of tariffs and other barriers — will reduce prices (and inflation), increase selection and improve job prospects. That is the heart of any free trade agreement worth its name and this one deserves the public's confident support.

Next: settling disputes.

Seven year waiting list to get septic system tested sophisticated test procedures. Again a survey the A.M.A. suggests that this factor alone adds up to 25 percent of medical costs in the U.S.A. It also suggests that the majority of these tests are neither required nor informative.

Finally then, we must look at the enormous costs involved in such new modalities as organ transplants and terminal care. The cost of the former will eventually lead to selective patient recipients. Better that we forego these procedures than selective elitist procedures. In the past, most people died at home, in familiar surrounding and with the support to their immediate families. Heroic measures were neither used or asked for. It was the natural and most dignified way to leave. Today the high cost of in-hospital terminal care which in the final analysis, has no purpose, should be permitted only for those who have no residence, family, or friends to see them through this period of their lives.

The last rather harsh suggestion that I might make is more controversial. If the medical profession takes up seriously, the education of the public in methods of preventing early morbidity and mortality, and if their patients refuse to alter their lifestyle at least to a point where their risks are reduced, then I suggest that those patients be told officially that they are no longer insured under O.H.I.P. and will be responsible for their own medical costs that result from their self-imposed high risk lifestyle.

Sincerely,
H. Michael Collins,
Gooderham, Ontario.

Septic systems classified

To the Editor:

The Haliburton County Echo has done some of the finest reporting regarding Ontario's cottaging industry. In the interest of continued accuracy and fairness, I would like to comment on two articles in the August 3 Haliburton County Echo that could have been misinterpreted to suggest that two-thirds of the septic systems in five Haliburton area lakes were polluting those lakes. Those five lakes had been inspected in 1987 as part of the Cottage Pollution Control Program by the Ministry of Environment (MOE). Last summer, similar suggestions were attributed to Mountain Lake and Hall's Lake in Haliburton as a result of the same survey. Consequently, commercial lodges were receiving cancellations from prospective customers who feared they would be exposing themselves to health risks in a seriously polluted lake. Statistics may be obtained from the Ministry of Environment that prove Haliburton lakes are some of the cleanest, healthiest lakes in the world.

The Cottage Pollution Control Program (CPCP) inspects septic systems and the surrounding soil. The water is not tested as part of this survey. Water quality testing is done regularly by cottagers and MOE. Water should always be treated before drinking. Haliburton lakes are excellent for swimming and other recreational activities.

The use of percentages and classifications can be misleading and real numbers from the results of the survey should remove fears and confusion.

There were five Haliburton County lakes tested last summer: Big Hawk Lake, Little Hawk Lake, Raven Lake, Trading Bay and Wolf Lake totalling 676 cottages. Of these, 169 septic systems were CLASS 1 and 2 indicating up to standard and requiring no changes.

There were 161 in the Class 2 seriously substandard which means they are not up to the standards established in 1974 for septic systems. All systems installed previous to that date would enter this classification. This system is not presenting a pollution problem. This system could malfunction if unusual stress such as increased usage was introduced and owners are recommended to upgrade in the future.

Some 86 were in Class 4, Nuisance category. This indicates that grey (wash) water is exposed on the surface of the ground and may reach the lake causing excessive weed growth.

A total of 187 were Class 5 Nuisance category indicating that a condition exists that exposes sewage on the surface of the ground—perhaps a hole in the system. A rainfall could wash this contamination into the lake.

Eight systems were Class 6 Direct Pollutor. This system is permitting sewage or leachate to contaminate the ground or surface water.

A total of 55 systems were Class 7, Unclassified Temporarily. This is usually a problem with locating the septic tank or tile bed. The owner is not available or doesn't know. A supervisor is called in to do final classification.

Ten systems were Class 8 Unclassified indicating abandoned premises or systems that are obviously not in use or could not be used. No pollution problem is present.

In summary, only class 4 to 6 require immediate upgrading or corrections. Class 7 is questionable. Class 4 to 6 represents 281 systems out of the total of 676. If history repeats itself, most of these systems will be corrected by the end of this year and the rest will have willingly signed agreements to upgrade. Few don't co-operate and legal action is initiated if that occurs. History also finds that those in the seriously substandard category are eager to upgrade their systems even though they are performing satisfactorily at present. You may have to wait two years in some areas to get your system attended to...contractors are such demand.

It is important to note that the cottagers themselves have asked for the Cottage Pollution Control Program (CPCP). The demand is so great that there is a seven year waiting list to get the survey done. The CPCP is not only providing an awareness of potential pollution and corrective measures but providing jobs for area students. The CPCP is conducted only in Haliburton and Muskoka area. The rest of the province does not have septic survey system. The Federation of Ontario Cottager's Associations Inc.(FOCA), the umbrella group for all lake associations in Ontario is asking the Ministry of Environment to expand this service to include the rest of cottaging lakes. There were 1534 properties inspected in 1977, a low of 517 in 1984 and 1049 in 1987. FOCA recommends that the program be expanded through increased staff and funding to allow more than four to five lakes to be inspected each year. The CPCP is not able to cope with the current demand and there are thousands of lakes to be inspected.

FOCA is requesting from the Ministry of Environment (MOE) a mandatory inspection of systems at the time of sale or transfer, similar to the mechanics certificate of fitness for automobiles. This could be a first step to regular mandatory inspection.

If you are aware of a system that seems to be polluting, call the Haliburton Health Unit. Your identity would be confidential.

If you would like your lake inspected, call Wayne Moore of the Muskoka-Haliburton MOE Office, 1-705-687-3408 or Zenith 33220.

If you would like to support FOCA in expanding the CPCP and mandatory inspection of septic systems at the time of sale or transfer, write The Honourable Jim Bradley, Minister of Environment, 15th Floor, St. Clair Ave. W., Toronto M4V 1P5. Mr. Bradley has committed himself to cleaner lakes and needs your show of interest.

Finally, rather than discouraging cottagers from participating in the CPCP with fears of misleading pollution stories, let's focus on the many positive benefits of this program. It would go a lot further to promote cleaner, healthier lakes.

Sincerely,

Jean Anthon,

President Federation of Ontario Cottager's Associations.

To the Editor:

In June, the Echo published a well-researched article by Mike Park regarding the difficulties faced by the physically handicapped in achieving mobility in their communities.

The article gave a group of interested people the impetus to try to improve the situation and we have formed a Committee for Equal Access.

Our first goal is to acquire transportation in the form of a specially equipped vehicle which would be available to anyone who cannot use conventional transportation for the disabled. We have received encouragement from reeve Murray Fearry and we are formulating a proposal to present to Dysart council.

A proposal must include the approximate number of potential users. While we have figures from the health care agencies, we are sure there are many people who would qualify for the service who are not under the care of these agencies. We need to hear from them as soon as possible, so if you are

ing in a beautifully-made ceramic pot and a beautifully-made painting."

The other day, Mr. Leonard was watching a program of a ploughing match. Here was a group of men and women competing to see who could make the straightest furrow in the ground, and getting as much satisfaction from a job well done as any artist could hope to achieve. "It was really clear they were artistically involved" in their appreciation of the clear and pure lines. "They were able to see the accomplishment and be moved by it."

No distinctions, please

The School of Fine Arts is to be congratulated for not making distinctions between fine arts and fine crafts, the Leonards say, and judging by the courses they teach, they know of what they speak. Mrs. Leonard teaches machine knitting, a skill which some people would pooh-pah at an art school.

"The machine doesn't do anything for you," she says emphatically, well-versed in the criticism that a machine takes away the individual's craftsmanship. "It's the person who operates it" who still has control of the creative process. "It's really individualistic."

She points to two students who used exactly the same wool, exactly the same instruction and created two entirely different fabrics, each one a reflection of their own personalities. It's virtually impossible to follow every step of a pattern so her students have to understand the techniques—and how to change them—before they can make something they really like.

Her husband, who has taken the course to see what it involves and gained an increased admiration for the knitters, says his wife shows her individuality through the colours she chooses and how she melds them together to bring them to life.

"Marilyn goes by a feeling, an inspiration. The technical people wouldn't dream of it."

Before she discovered machine knitting, Mrs. Leonard directed her love of colour into her paintings. Then she incorporated it in her love of tactile objects—things which invite one to touch them, not just to stand back and admire. But the crux of the whole matter finally revolved around her love of clothes—she wanted to make things she could wear. If she wove a tapestry, she'd be disappointed that she had to hang it on a wall instead of her person.

From her wool store in Toronto, Mrs. Leonard gets the materials she dyes into any colour she fancies, and then spins it into the yarns she will use in her knitting and crocheting. She can create to her heart's content and then have the proof in the wearing. "Now I get to paint and draw but it's all on fabrics."

Yet to both of the Leonards, an important part of their creativeness is sharing it with others. The school provides them a place where they can demonstrate the satisfaction that grows from having the skills to do things by themselves, and all the while re-inforcing their belief in why having an outlet for creativity—in whatever form it takes—is such an essential ingredient for happiness.

Many people with handicaps seldom go out as the difficulties of getting into a car negate the pleasure of the outing. The vehicle we are planning will be used for church, doctor's visits, shopping, visiting families, social events, in fact, all the things we more fortunate people take for granted.

There is of course, the problem of access to businesses but I am sure the situation will improve as the handicapped become a more visible part of our community.

Tradition at Birch Point

To the Editor:

I have just returned from another enjoyable vacation at Birch Point Lodge, on Lake Kashagawigamog celebrating my sixtieth year since first going there in 1928, we met at that time by Bruce Gould "Gould's Station".

This year the third generation is managing the lodge Roxanne and Dennis Casey.

It is my understanding that Bruce and Marion Gould were the first to venture a Lodge on the Lake, in 1922, so I was naturally surprised to read anything in The Echo of Marion's death in March of this year. Surely anyone in her 91st year who was helping in the kitchen last year, deserves some recognition in the community.

After Bruce died Marion carried on for a few years and then their daughter Jean and her husband Earl Casey took over when they retired their son, Dennis and his wife Roxanne are carrying on.

We usually booked the last two weeks in July for our vacation at Birch Point each year, greeting old friends and making new ones who usually returned the following years.

I was most interested this year to see three generations enjoying a holiday together from some months to more than 80 and 90 years. What a lovely family vacation.

One year I remember a family reunion was held at the lodge some members coming from Winnipeg and United States to renew old times.

It was a fun two weeks—sorting out the family connection.

I would like to thank the staff and especially Roxanne and Dennis for acknowledging the 60th year of my being at Birch Point, at the dinner hour on Friday night. Maybe I'll make it in 1989.

Best wishes for the continuing success of Birch Point Lodge.

Positive stories enjoyed

To the Editor:

I would just like to say that your newspaper gives tremendous coverage to so many "human" articles. It's a marvellous history book. I particularly enjoyed Martha Perkins' review on the work of the naturalist, R. D. Lawrence. I did want to reply to it but unfortunately we were getting ready for a month's visit to the U.K. and I just never found the time.

The Haliburton County Echo is the type of newspaper I always dreamed of, but never expected to see, until we came to Cardiff nearly two years ago, and discovered it.

Monmouth Fair: old fashioned fun

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

It was a fair which could transport you back to the days when a man's command of his horses, a woman's expertise in the kitchen and a child's knack of finding fun in the simplest games were good measures of homesteaders' ability to make the most of the land and times. At the fair, you could test your mettle against people who also had to learn how to make do in an area which didn't always kindly lend itself to prosperity.

The Monmouth Agricultural Society kept these traditions alive with its Fifth Annual Agricultural Fair, held last weekend at the Wilberforce fairgrounds. There were no bright lights of the midway, no hucksters and hustlers, unless you count the people trying to give away kittens, and no loud music—but that made it all the more enjoyable. (There was probably a bit of old-fashioned electioneering going on too when a certain Lindsay lawyer, who just happened to be the Liberal candidate in the last federal election, was seen to be taking an intent interest in the goat displays. Could Bruce Glass smell an election in the air?)

The Agricultural Society provided people with simple, inexpensive ways to enjoy a couple of days of summer. Local gardeners, bakers, farmers, horse riders, groomers, livestock tenders, dog owners and proud parents were given a showcase in which they could let their achievements of the past year shine. Whether in the indoor display area, the clearing in front of the animal stalls, the equestrian ring or the Lloyd Watson Centre where the baby contest was held, there was some outlet for everyone. Even baseball players without a game to attend could practice at the dunk tank and a gentle nudge was all that was needed to coach a frog onto victory in the popular, if somewhat slippery, race.

The only drawback of the weekend was an accident at one of the horse shows. In the cross country riding event, the horse was supposed to come down the laneway and make a quick left to finish in a field. A crowd of people was watching the event in the area beyond where the horse and rider were supposed to turn.

A horse without a rider was the first competitor to make its way down the laneway. The rider had jumped off out of sight of the crowd and a local farmer caught the runaway and returned it to its rider. Then another horse and rider completed the course successfully before the young girl who had been thrown came towards the crowd on her skitish horse. The horse panicked, the girl could not control it, and instead of making the turn, the horse crashed through the group of spectators.

Sharon Stoughton-Craig of Wilberforce was taken to the Haliburton Hospital by car, but the local firemen had to carry Margaret McPhail of Toronto to the emergency vehicle on a stretcher. While Mrs. McPhail waited at the fire station for the Bancroft ambulance to arrive, Dr. Laurie Brown made sure her dog, Rosie, had not suffered any broken bones or serious bruises. Mrs. Stoughton-Craig had to take it easy for the next few days and after being transferred to Sunnybrook Hospital, Mrs. McPhail was admitted for the night and discharged on Sunday.

Other than this unfortunate incident, organizers were pleased with the event. Attendance was down, but those who did brave the heat and humidity enjoyed the events. The results are as follows:

BABY SHOW: Newborn to 6 mos., Amanda Rogers, Harcourt; 7-12 mos., Spencer Barnes, Cedar Lake; 13-18 mos., Martin Pennocu; 19-24 mos., Jacque Jones, Oshawa.

POULTRY: Lloyd Wheller, Bancroft.

DOMESTIC SCIENCES: Most points from entries: Ida Holmes, Wilberforce; Elizabeth Murphy, Toronto; Yolande Savret, Wilberforce; Charles and Mrs. Hughes, Wilberforce; Freda Evans, Highland Grove; Florence Coumbs won the Canada Packers prize for the best quilt in the show.

Singing the Pothole Blues

WILBERFORCE NEWS

by Marian Donovan

Stealing some of the words and the melody from the Beatles, try singing this song as you rattle and bump along the road between Highland Grove and Wilberforce: I heard the news today Oh Boy, A million holes in Highway 648. And though the holes are rather small, They have to fill them all, And now I know why I need shocks and spring and lots of other parts and funny things, keep happening to my car—ar—ar.

One really does have to have a sense of humour to travel this exciting highway. They have even removed most of the bump signs to add an element of surprise.

Next November 5, there is to be a Christmas Craft show at the Lloyd Watson Centr. I know it is very early to mention this but the reason is that anyone wishing to rent a table for this event will want to start work soon on all the work to be displayed and sold. This will be the fourth annual show and each year it gets bigger and better. Any information needed can be obtained by calling either Joyce Bowman or Cindy Ablett at 448-2128.

The bridge scores for the Tuesday night Tory Hill club came courtesy of Ida Holmes this week. Ed and Gwen Taylor couldn't make it as Gwen was a little under the weather. Hope you're feeling better soon Gwen. Nick Lehoczyk of Eagle Lake took first prize. Second was Ev Fleming of Haliburton. Maurine Finlay of Tory Hill took third prize with the consolation awarded to Ross Agnew of Wilberforce.

The Monday night euchre at Hyland Grove saw the high scores going to Phyllis Bowen and Al Heaton. Most lone hands were held by Pat Grant and David Lawrence, while the low scorers were Elaine Wright and Irwin Bowen. The travellers prize was won by Nellie Jones.

Jeff and Jacqueline Prosser, owners of the Ridgeview Restaurant, were victims of a robbery recently. The thieves took gold jewelry and in doing so destroyed the entrance to the store. It certainly makes the blood boil when decent people, trying to make a living, are hurt this way. Whoever the thief or thieves are as the Irish say "Bad cess to them."

Wilberforce Agricultural Fair couldn't have asked for more perfect weather. This is the one time I wish I wasn't in business and so busy on a weekend. I would dearly have loved to attend, particularly the horse events and the crafts. Oh well—maybe next year.

The best part of the Agricultural Fair is the variety of competitors it attracts—everyone can win at something

PEOPLE

A local musician sings praises of Redstone Lake

by MIKE PARK
Staff Reporter

"PURE AS A VIRGIN, bright as a pearl." That's how Bruce Caves, a local cottager and musician, likes to describe his favourite place on earth—Redstone Lake, north of Haliburton. In fact, he loves the lake so much he's written and recorded a song about it with Canadian country legend "Stompin' Tom" Connors. The song's called, simply enough, Redstone Lake.

It's the beauty of the place and the memories it bring back to him which inspired Caves to write the song.

"I've loved this place since I was a kid," he says.

The Redstone song, Caves' first attempt at song writing and performing on a professional level, was written for a special compilation album of unknown Canadian talent put together by Stompin' Tom Connors, who insisted the songs for "Stompin' Tom" be back to Assist Canadian Talent, (ACT)" had to be original and Canadian. Caves put a few lines down at home but was really stumped for the song until he came up to his cottage on East Bay and Boyce's Road. While he was sitting on his dock one night, a flood of memories about his "old homestead" came back to him and later that weekend he finished the song.

He has two songs on the album, the other one being Pappy's Old Workshop, about his memories of his father. Before now, Caves has only performed for family picnics but became more interested in music professionally about six years ago when mutual friend Cliff Evans introduced him to Stompin' Tom. Since then he and Tom have become great friends and that's how Caves got on this album.

"ACT" is Stompin' Tom's first album in more than 12 years. An ardent Canadian patriot, Connors left the Canadian music scene and returned his Juno awards in 1976. He did it because he saw American music taking over and wiping out the Canadian industry while radio stations stood by and let it happen. He said Canadian talent was being ignored by the radio stations because they wouldn't make any money for them; Canadians weren't being given a chance to perform in their own country.

Now Stompin' Tom is back and using his Boot Records label, the only one of twelve independent Canadian labels still surviving, to promote Canadian talent. "ACT" is the first in a series of albums which will feature and promote unknown Canadian talent. They will be available at Sted-mans in Haliburton and Minden and at Foodland in Eagle Lake. In September, Stompin' Tom will be putting out a solo record for the first time in 12 years, called "Stompin' Tom's Fiddlin' Songs."

Like Stompin' Tom, most of Cave's songs are created from his own experiences of about real people he knows. Redstone Lake is almost the story of his life and Stompin' Tom liked it so much he offered to help him record it. With this success to prompt him, Cave has written about a dozen more.

"When I write a song, it's a piece of here," says Caves solemnly, placing his right hand over his heart.

By day a Mississauga fireman, Caves first came to Redstone Lake in 1947 on a family trip with his parents and family friends, Calvin Bailey and Bill Brownridge. They all drove up in an old 1932 Plymouth and stayed at Redstone Lodge, then run by Rex Boyce. In those days, he says, it wasn't very built up or accessible. To get to the lodge, he remembers fondly, everyone had to tote their luggage across Barnum's Bay on a rope suspension bridge.

The Old Black Hat

But the land and the lake were beautiful and the whole group fell in love with the area. Calvin Bailey fell in so much in love that in 1952, says Caves, he quit his city life and moved to Long Lake to become a trapper. He became a local figure, characterized by the big old black cowboy hat he always wore. Bailey inspired Caves to write another song, The Old Black Hat.

Over the next few summers, Caves and his family stayed in the apartment over Bill Barnum's boat house. These were the days when there wasn't a lot of cottages on the lake. He can remember portaging a big flat-bottom boat over to Kennis to go fishing and at that time there were no cottages on Kennis Lake. The trout were monsters back then.

Caves met his wife, Sandra, in school in 1955. At the same time her father, Carl Bradley, bought a large parcel of land on East Bay. When they married in 1962, they found themselves with a lot in that parcel and built a cottage and have been there ever since. Next year when Caves retires, that cottage will become their home.

"We watched our family grow up and fish and play on Redstone Lake," he says of the time that has passed since. Those family times have inspired him to write another song, 25 Years of Love for his 25th anniversary.

Currently, Caves career is on hold. He's waiting to see how the album will do and still plays a few

'I've loved this place since I was a kid,' says Bruce Caves of what he describes as the best place in the world to live—Redstone Lake. The aspiring country and western song writer has sung the area's praises in a new album put out by Stompin' Tom Connors. It's due out this September family get-togethers every now and then. On August 2nd he performed The Old Black Hat for Calvin Bailey at his 83rd birthday at his cabin on Long Lake. Performing those songs that come from the heart is what Caves loves to do.

"Those are the things you can do for people that don't cost you a damn cent," he says. "I enjoy doing it."

Here are the words of Redstone Lake for everyone to enjoy:

*The first time I saw her, I fell in love,
She was quiet and peaceful, like I dreamed of,
So clean and so pretty, she stole away my heart,
And for thirty long years, now, I could never part
From my lady, and I never will
She's my Redstone Lake in the Haliburton Hills.*

Pure as a virgin, bright as a pearl,

*I knew right away she was meant to be my girl
Even the hills all around her did say
"Build a little homestead and don't go away
From your lady," and I never will
She's my Redstone Lake in the Haliburton Hills.*

*I've paddled her surface when she was calm,
I swam in her waters when she was warm,
I fished in her bays in the bright early morn,
And there's just no way this old heart can be torn
From my lady, and never will,
She's my Redstone Lake in the Haliburton Hills.*

*When I hear that loon call the end of day,
And old Mother Duck hides her ducklings away,
I'm watching the sun set over the pines,
And I can't get my heart off that sweet gal of mine.
She's my lady, and she always will Be my Redstone Lake in the Haliburton Hills.*

Road improvements welcomed

WEST GUILFORD NEWS

by Eleanor Cooper

Mabel Helles of Lindsay has been visiting her family, John and Isabelle Rivers, at Cranberry Lake.

The Duchene-Brown wedding dance took place at the Community Centre on Saturday night. Congratulations and best wishes to Chris and Vince from all of us.

The road improvements up past the Community Centre and the store and the north side of Pine Lake have been favourably noted and enjoyed by summer drivers and local people alike. Thanks to those who worked in the heat to get them done.

On Sunday in St. Paul's Anglican Church, Minden, grand-daughter of Holly and Sylvia Sisson, was guest of honour at a surprise reception prior to her departure for Japan. Misti will be going to Osaka as a Rotary Exchange Student. She will be going through the same process of preparation, meetings, and new surroundings, including new language, which Krista Mitchell will be experiencing and Philip Johnston has just completed. We wish her well and know she'll be missed during her exciting year from home.

Last Thursday a ball game of considerable interest took place at the Guilford diamond. The former team of ladies played the newer team. It was organized by Cheryl Cooper and Nancy Brink. George Nicholls was umpire. Funds were raised for the present team and the crowd enjoyed the game as much as the players, judging by the amount of fun. The event will be repeated at least once more.

Shirley and Ken Rapson attended the wedding of Gwen (Varty) and Gord Sutton's daughter, Cindy, in Toronto on Saturday, August 13.

Congratulations to John and Terry Carr on the birth of their second daughter, Christine Danielle, on July 24, at Peterborough Civic.

Doreen Sisson and Leslie Chumbley have led the Vacation Bible School at St. Andrew's Church this summer. Janet Bain was able to assist for two of the five days as well. Capt. Paul Thoms of Church Army, who is stationed at Wilberforce, assisted daily in the area of drama to emphasise the lessons and stories learned. Attendance averaged 15 per day.

Finally, a late but sincere note: Thanks to Carol Stamp for all the organizational effort for Canada Day. It wasn't mentioned before, but the event just would not happen, or get going as smoothly as it does, without her efforts. We want to her to know the community appreciates her.

Because of the celebrations that day, we have some excellent family pictures which mean a lot now that Andy is in Chilliwack, British Columbia.

Rails' End gets new paint

GUILD NOTES

by Virginia Muenzel

THE OUTSIDE of the Rails' End Gallery is literally crawling with people this month. Thanks to the co-operation of the Dysart Municipality (they supplied the materials) the Canada World Youth Group is giving the Gallery a much needed coat of paint. And they are doing a great job. We also have been fortunate enough to qualify for held from two young women in the group. Their names are Danielle Blain from Montreal, Quebec, and Bushra Ijazkhan from Aslamabad, Pakistan. Please stop and say hello to them when you visit the Gallery.

On Wednesday, September 14 at 12 noon, the H.H.G.F.A. is hosting a Guild member luncheon at the Pinestone Inn. There will be 100 tickets pre-sold to this event at $7 each. It's a great opportunity to become acquainted with fellow members, hear a guest speaker and enjoy a tasty lunch. I would like to extend my personal invitation to you to participate in this function. Tickets are available at the Gallery. Our board member, Elva Robinson, is making the arrangements.

Have you seen the August Gallery shows? People are quite awestruck by Michael Robinson's compelling art. Allow yourself some time to spend in the cool quiet Highland Room of the Gallery. Each of his pieces has a story to tell. They certainly make you think. Afterward, you can visit the Waiting Room and relax with Mary Ellen McQuay's hand-painted photographs. They are sure to stir up memories and glimpses into most everyone's childhood.

Don't forget, August 17 is music night at the movies. And on August 24, the gallery will be showing William Weintraub's Canadian production, "Why Rock the Boat". The last movie will be on August 31. His, "Girl Friday", with Cary Grant and Rosalind Russell. Donations are gratefully accepted at the door.

See you at the movies!

Sun still doesn't set on Empire

COUNTY LIBRARY NEWS

by Joel Levis

Some years ago, when a number of journalists were well into their cups, the subject of the demise of the British Empire came up and it was certainly only when the concept of the "sun never sets" arose that a copy of Whitaker's Almanack was procured and it was discovered that "sun (still) doesn't set" on the Empire!

Mind you, some of the places are rather small, populated only by sea weed and snails but they do appear on the official list of holdings (as it were) and number over 200 named islands and a thousand rocks, shoals and skerries.

But there are number of bigger places and herein lies the tale as Simon Winchester tells in The Sun Never Sets available through the Haliburton County Public Library.

Winchester decided that he should visit these places but there had to be a few guidelines. First, there had to be a way to get there; second, there had to be people; and third, there had to be a resident Governor.

The places that he eventually visited all had tales of their own, although in more than one instance, the task of getting there was sometimes equal to the visit itself. To consider the tales themselves, let's start with Diego Garcia.

Few people have ever heard of the British Indian Ocean Territory (BIOT) and the British Government would like to keep it that way. In the mid-60's, the entire population was transported by the Labour Government to poverty in Mauritius and the land was leased to the U. S. Military. However, the British Government maintains absolute control. No one is allowed to visit unless they are invited and no one is invited. Winchester got there and was almost sent back to sea with no water and a faulty marine engine, the authorities being so anxious to

Two new and colourful shows open at gallery

The Rails' End Gallery is running two new shows of Canadian artists and their work.

In the main part of the Gallery, native artist Michael Robinson is exhibiting his works called The Spirit and The Smoke. The exhibit is a collection of 51 works in various media, mostly water colours, depicting the struggle and conflict between the native's traditional, earth-bound society and modern, technological Canada in the '80's. The collection is on loan from The Thunder Bay National Exhibition Centre and Centre for Indian Art.

The two shows run until September 10.

In the other part of the Gallery, Mary Ellen McQuay is showing her interesting combination of two traditional medium hand painted photographs. Each of her works combines the erie beauty of the black and white photograph with the shocking reality of colour and paint. The black and white background adds a certain surrealism to the colours and the entire work.

Both shows will run until September 10. As a special bonus to Gallery patrons, Michael Robinson will be at a public reception at the Rail's End on Saturday, September 3rd between 2 p.m. and 4 p.m.

COMMUNITY NEWS

Crash kills two, injures five

KINMOUNT NEWS

by Millie Moss

There was a two car crash on the highway near the Head Lake home of the Elwood Baldwins recently which sadly left two dead and five others in hospital.

Bill and I enjoyed a short visit with Hilda and Jesse Buxcey Sunday August 7 in Norland.

I'd like to pass on these beautiful words by Patience Stong, which I read recently and hope they may find a little comfort for you. Titled, "The Right Road"—"Making a new kind of life for yourself, trying your best to go on. Living alone with the wreck of your dreams, when all that was dearest is gone. Finding the road that's the right road for you, getting things straight in your mind—clinging to thoughts that recall happy hours, leaving the sad ones behind. Facing the days and the weeks and the months, striving to make a fresh start—learning to look at that chair empty now, hiding the pain in your heart. Smiling at others, remembering too, that all have their crosses to bear—turning for strength, consolation and hope, to the calm and the comfort of prayer. Fighting back tears of regret and self-pity—summoning faith to sustain. Believing that someday and somewhere, somehow, you'll be together again."

Wasn't that some kind of a rainfall on Tuesday, Aug. 9. We drove to Lindsay and it was threatening all the way but on our way from there to Beaverton area, the skies opened up. Many cars stopped by the wayside for the rain to ease up but it poured all the way back to Kinmount. Too bad we didn't get this back in July.

On Tuesday night Aug. 9, just past Baseline Road we almost drove into a huge tree which had come down across the road. Jason and I got out from the car and started breaking branches off. Then a large Weston Bakery truck came up behind our car. The driver helped us break branches and then another car with a trailer came from the direction of Kinmount and with another pair of hands, we made a path wide enough for a car to get through. The truck was another story so I took the driver's name and called the police as I got home. About 1:30 a.m. I had a return call from the police to say that a cruiser had gone along 503 and didn't see a thing. That tree sure didn't get up and walk.

Results of St. James Kinmount euchre games Tuesday, August 9 were ladies' high: Dorothy Anderson, ladies low, Ruby Schell, men's high: Timmie Williams, men's low: Iva Woods, lone hands: Margaret Kylie. There were 19 people in attendance.

Jason and I enjoyed a visit with Boyd Williamson on Wednesday, August 10. Barb McCluney was telling us of some troubles she and some of her family were having the same night as our mishap with the tree. Boyd, who sat quietly all through our stories said "If you women stayed home where you belong, like I do, you wouldn't be having all these problems." Maybe you're right, Boyd, but it wouldn't be any fun and besides what would we talk about—free trade? That only makes us mad, I wonder if Wayne Gretzky is part of that deal. Oh well, we have Harold Ballard back.

Results of Kinmount Railroad Station Seniors Drop-In Centre euchre, Thursday, August 11 were:

Ladies high, ruby Holbrook, ladies low, Ann Rivers, men's high, Charlie Henderson, men's low, Win Wilson, lone hands, Vi Cooke.

I'm sorry to hear Brenda Simmonds is not well these days. I hope to hear better news soon.

Bill and Win Wilson visited their daughter Joan Mills at a Pickering, overnight recently. While there, they visited Scarborough Bluffs which Win hadn't seen in years. He couldn't get over the change. She says they now have a beautiful park there.

Don't forget our shut-ins: Lila Simmonds who is now back in Extensicare, Haliburton, Pauline Smart and Verlie Young in Haliburton Hospital, Mary O'Toole, Mrs. Lyle, Gerrie McKay and Mary Guillemins' mom who are all at Hyland Crest in Minden. They would love to feel they are not forgotten.

Well folks, stay well and happy, read the Echo and give me a call at 488-2353.

keep the place quiet.

Bermuda: the airport is a U.S. Military base as well; the air traffic controllers are military and the place is crawling with U.S. aircraft including some special items referred to as Take Charge and Move Out (TACAMO) which is only one of three units in the world that will play an active role in any nuclear military junket. Yet the island is administered by a British Governor.

Then there is Ascension Island which came to prominence with the Falklands War. While visitors are not exactly welcome, they are not treated like tourists to the BIOT. Mind you, the island is really run by the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC).

And we all know about the Falklands. Winchester was there when the problems started and shortly thereafter.

Tristan de Cunha was evacuated in the sixties when the volcano blew up; St. Helena is where Napoleon was sent in defeat; and, there are still some "Christians" on Pitcairn Island in the Pacific. Hong Kong and Gibraltar are also visited and both have their own special histories.

The book is called The Sun Never Sets by Paul Winchester; ask for it your local branch of the Haliburton County Public Library.

More 'corny' recipes...

NADA'S KITCHEN

Nada Vaughan

"If we claim to have fellowship with Him yet walk in the darkness, we lie and do not live by truth. 1 John 1:6

Today's recipes are "corny" but good (like Don Popple's jokes!). I remember when Rick and I were first married (15 years ago) we went to a farm where you could pick your own corn—3 dozen for 99 cents!!

CHUNKY CORN CHOWDER

4 slices bacon, diced
1 small onion, chopped
1 cup chopped celery
2 large potatoes, peeled and cubed
1 quart milk
12 oz. kernel corn
1 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. dried dill
Freshly ground pepper
1/4 Tabasco sauce

Cook the bacon in a large saucepan just until it begins to brown. Add onion, celery and potatoes. Cook over medium heat, stirring occasionally, until the onion is soft—about five minutes. Add the remaining ingredients. Cover and heat, but do not boil. Reduce heat and simmer 20 to 30 minutes or until potatoes and the corn are tender. Stir often. Serves 6.

CORN AND CHEESE CASSEROLE

About 2 cups corn kernels
2 beaten eggs
1 cup milk
Salt and pepper to taste
1 cup grated cheese
3 tbsp. minced onion
Topping:
2 tbsp. melted butter
1/2 cup dried bread crumbs

Stir all but the topping together and pour into a well-buttered loaf pan or small casserole. Melt the butter, stir in the crumbs to absorb all the butter and sprinkle over the corn mixture. Bake at 350 degrees for about 40 minutes.

CORN FRITTERS

(delicious with maple syrup at breakfast, corn fritters can also be served as a vegetable with dinner)

15 oz. can creamed corn
2 eggs, beaten
2 tbsp. melted butter
2 cups flour
2 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. salt
1/2 tsp. curry powder
4-5 cups oil for deep frying

Combine corn, eggs and butter. Sift dry ingredients together and blend in corn mixture. Drop mixture by spoonfuls into hot oil (375 degrees F.). Fry for approximately 4 minutes, turning once to cook evenly. Drain well. Makes 15-18 fritters.

BAKED CORN CUSTARD

(This is great also with maple syrup or with cold meat or bacon)

Corn cut from 6 to 10 cobs, or about 2 cupfuls kernels, fresh, frozen, or niblets
2 egg yolks, lightly beaten
1 cup milk
1 tbsp. flour
1 tbsp. sugar
Salt and pepper to taste
2 tbsp. melted butter
Pinch of curry powder (optional)
2 egg whites beaten stiff

Stir everything but the egg whites together. Then beat the egg whites and fold them in. Pour all into a well-buttered baking dish and bake uncovered, in a 350 degrees oven for about an hour, or until the custard is firm and golden brown. Makes 6 to 8 servings.

Dysart council notes...

Dysart council met August 8 and considered the following matters:

The CBC was granted permission to delay the removal of the transmitting poles in Rotary Park until spring of 1989.

The tender of Winslow-Gerolomy in the amount of $76,068.72 for an 1989 international F2574 accepted. Delivery will be early November 1988. Acceptance is subject to Ministry of Transportation and Communications specifications.

The Municipality approved applications for shoreline improvement as requested to the Ministry Resources by: Proposed filling (sand and gravel)—Raymond Luck, Plan 572, Lot 11 (Little Redstone). Proposed filling (sand and gravel)—Robert Davidge, Plan 492, Lot 1, Eagle Lake. Proposed dredging and retaining wall—Jim Carmochan—Plan 367, Lots 24 and 25 (Little Redstone). Retaining wall, back fill and beach improvement, Ernest Lines—Plan 388, Lot 5 (Redstone). Renewal to dredge Glenn Fraser—Pt. Lot 21, Con. 2, Little Redstone.

The Municipality will petition the Province of Ontario through MPP, John Ekins, to proceed with a Private Act to allow the improvement of Deer Lake Drive.

Norm's Garbage Disposal fee increased to $150 per month for three months in 1988 and four months in 1989, the remainder to remain at current rate of $70 per month.

By-law No. 88-28, 88-29 and 88-30 to Amend Zoning By-Law No. 77-32, were passed.

An application for an amendment to the Zoning By-Law on Part of Lot 17, Concession 2, in the Township of Harcourt, from Carolyn Rogers approved for processing.

An application for closure and purchase of the perpendicular shoreline road allowance abutting lands of Steve Brown in Part of Lot 2, Concession IV, for the Township of Guilford, was approved for processing.

The Reeve and Clerk were authorized to sign the Merrill Barry Subdivision Agreement after same has been approved by the applicable agencies and signed by the owners.

An application for closure and purchase of the shoreline road allowance by Aldelaur Enterprises Limited (Picadilly Bay, Redstone Lake) was approved for processing.

Council authorized the issuance of a permit to Dr.

H. E. Good on Part of Lot 6, Block G, in the Town Plot, provided all provisions of the General Commercial zone are complied with and the terms of the original development agreement are adhered to. The plans are to reflect how the existing well is to be dealt with, and loading and unloading facilities.

An application for closure and purchase of the shoreline road allowance in front of Part of Lot 7, Concession 7, in the Township of Dysart, Gertrude B. Clarke was approved for processing. Council approved the issuance of a permit for the reconstruction of the cottage destroyed by fire this, one kitchen facility only, in either building. One cottage may have a kitchen—the other may not.

The Reeve and Clerk were authorized to sign the severance agreement between the Municipality and Derrell Stamp (Paradise Lake) provided Stamp has obtained title to the property.

The Municipality had no objection to an extension of six months on draft plan of subdivision File 46T-79140 (Wallings Farm) as the owner is actively attempting to bring this plan to the point of final registration.

The Reeve and Clerk were authorized to purchase property from Lehoczy (Eagle Lake) for a purchased price of $57,000 and the Planning Supervisor will advertise the sale of property on Parsons Road.

AHM council briefs...

Anson, Hindon and Minden council met Aug. 11 and considered the following matters:

Charles Brown explained to Council that he has had access to Lot 13, Concession 13, Township of Minden, over the past 30 years. On October 11, 1987, Brown registered a Declaration of Possession and now he has asked Council to pay taxes on this property.

This property was fenced in July, 1987. The Reeve recommended that Council would have to seek legal advice on this matter, since the Municipality is presently involved in clearing up the Twelve Mile Beach problem. Reeve Nesbitt also recommended that Brown to hold off going to the Assessment Office to change the name on this piece of property. Brown gave the Township a copy of the deed and declaration, which will be sent to the Township Solicitor for recommendation on this matter.

Visitors and trips a welcome relief from summer's heat

SENIOR LEAGUE

by Pearl Lyle

Hello Readers: It was a relief to see the rain, but the weather is still very warm.

Mrs. Marion Levinsky of Woodville and Mrs. Donald York of Sunderland were guests of Mrs. Verna Jarvis last week. Martha Mansfield of Minden came to call on Gertie McKay and some others here at Hyland Crest last week. One of Bert Harrison's sons came and took him out for the day on Sunday. Mrs. Kirkpatrick had some of her family to visit with her on the weekend. Anna Gordon came on Saturday and took me out for lunch. I got a surprise when we went to the restaurant; my grandson Edward Wilkinson, his wife Jan and two daughters, and a grand daughter, Patricia Hughes were joining us for lunch.

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Cameron of Peterborough called on Thursday and took Winnie Barnum to their cottage for the day. She is at present visiting friends and relatives in Peterborough and vicinity.

At the present time Mill Allison Morley of Toronto is visiting her father, the administrator of Hyland Crest.

The C.W.L. of Kinmount Catholic Church brought the afternoon tea on Thursday. It was really nice to see them and the lunch was delicious. We enjoyed the guitar playing and singing by Father Felix.

Jean Taylor and Lola Prentice have been ill recently. Lola is in Minden Hospital, and we wish her a speedy recovery.

Till next week. "A new neighbour becomes a friend as soon as she steps over the doorstep."

Tags are in the mail: MNR

The Ministry of Natural Resources has mailed 31,694 cow and bull validation tags to hunters for the 1988 moose hunt.

The annual draw for moose validation tags was held June 30, and all of the 80,886 hunters who put their names on the 1988 draw were notified, whether or not they receive tags, by the end of July.

During the second and third weeks of August, hunters who applied but were not successful in this year's draw will be given a chance to obtain one of the 4,017 surplus tags. This will bring the total of 1988 tags to 35,711.

The ministry will notify eligible hunters by mail of the management units where surplus tags are available and how to make application.

Surplus tags exist because the demand is lower in some units, generally remote areas, or units which have archery tags.

Hunters who don't receive a tag in the initial draw may also book a hunt through tourist outfitters who may have tags available. All purchasers of moose licenses may hunt for calf moose.

The MNR says that the Selective Harvest Program began, there were fewer than 80,000 moose in Ontario. Now, there are 120,000 and the ministry's goal is to increase the population to 160,000 by the end of the century.

Canadians better educated

REPORT FROM PARLIAMENT

by Bill Scott, MP

ACCORDING TO 1986 Census data released March 1, 1988 by Statistics Canada, Canadians are better educated than ever before, women accounted for the majority of growth in the labour force and employment, and the rapidly growing service industries accounted for two in every three Canadian workers.

The data paint a positive picture for Canada and Canadians showing that the economy recovered well from the recession in the early 1980's, Dr. Ivan Fellegi, Canada's Chief Statistician said at a news conference.

Three major findings emerge from the 1986 Census data:

Ontario replaced British Columbia and Alberta as the principal beneficiary of population movement within Canada;

Women accounted for almost three-quarters of labour force growth and nine-tenths of employment growth between 1981 and 1986, while diversifying the nature of their participation in the labour market. Significant progress has been made in increasing the average level of education of the population. Young Canadians in general are receiving far more formal education than their parents did.

Between 1981 and 1986, the proportion of women in the labour force rose for most age groups and particularly for women with young children.

Younger women entered a variety of non-traditional industries and occupations, while the number of self-employed women increased by almost 30%.

The 1986 Census data also show that the number of university graduates increased by 26 percent from 1981 and that more young women (55) held degrees than young men. Other results show Ontario as the preferred destination of Canadians moving between provinces, a change from the 1970's when Alberta and British Columbia enjoyed this status.

Dr. Fellegi said, "the mobility of Canadians helped balance the supply and demand of workers in the regions while women have made a major and varied contribution to the job market."

Fishing licences net $9M

QUEEN'S PARK REPORT

by John Eakins, MPP

This week I would like to talk about an important part of Victoria-Haliburton — the sport fishing industry.

Sales of the new Ontario resident sport fishing licence, which came into effect last year, have exceeded the expectations of the Ministry of Natural Resources.

The licence became mandatory on January 1, 1987 for most adults in Ontario aged 18 to 64. The first licences were available in November of 1986 and it was predicted that sales of the 1987 issue would reach $8.2 million. But by the end of 1987, more than 900,000 licences were sold, generating in excess of $9 million in revenues.

All of the money from the sale of the licences are being and will be allocated to fisheries management projects across Ontario. From November 1986 to the present time, a total of $8.9 million has been allocated to expand the fisheries program. The allocation for the fiscal year of 1988/89 will be increased by $950,000 to be a total of $9.15 million.

For the 1987/88 fiscal year, 30 percent of the $8.2 million budget, almost $2.5 million, was spent on the fisheries projects in northern Ontario. Another 46 percent, or about $3.8 million, was spent in southern Ontario. The remaining 24 percent was distributed throughout the province to fund projects such as research, fish culture, public service and general habitat assessment and rehabilitation. This benefits the whole of Ontario.

The types of projects include: population and habitat management; large scale rehabilitation of degraded habitat; law enforcement; public education; inventory and assessment; research; fish culture and minor capital works such as the construction of access points. The funding also covers the cost of producing, distributing and accounting for licence sales.

Resident fishing licences, valid throughout 1988, went on sale in December. They are available through the Ministry's network of private licence issuers and from the MNR district offices. The MNR district offices in Victoria-Haliburton are located at 322 Kent Street West in Lindsay and on Highway 35 in Minden.

Revenues from the sale of licences were used in a recent experiment to stock Atlantic salmon back into the Lake Ontario water shed. My colleague, the Honourable Vince Kerrio, Minister of Natural Resources, recently released salmon smolts into the Credit River at Cheltenham.

It's all part of a 10 year experiment to try to re-establish a strain of this historic fish in Lake Ontario. About 30,000 smolts are being stocked this year and over the next five years, the Ministry will stock 50,000 Atlantic salmon a year.

HOME SUPPORT

Age is no barrier to fitness. Studies show that inactive men and women in their 80's and 90's can still improve their fitness and well-being with a regular progressive activity program.

An active lifestyle cannot guarantee you a longer life or freedom from disease. It should ensure a more vigorous enjoyable lifestyle, and in the event of illness or surgery, a better chance of survival and the best possible recovery.

Summer activities for older adults offered by Haliburton County Home Support Services Drop-In Centre: Monday, 10:00 a.m. shuffleboard, Tuesday, 4:00 p.m., Fit Swim; Wednesday, 10:00 a.m. shuffleboard, Thursday, 10:00 a.m. Tennis or Line Dancing; 4:00 p.m. Fit Swim; Friday, 10:00 a.m. Horseshoes. For more information contact Katherine at 457-2171.

Ten good reasons to join the active seniors are: More efficient blood circulation and breathing; improved muscle function; improved digestion; less constipation; stronger bones; more supple joints; attractive appearance and control of body weight; more energy and pep; increased confidence and well-being; opportunities for socialization and friendship; improved mobility; less chance of falls or accidents; continuing independence; and increased fun and enjoyment;

Let this be your invitation to join the active seniors of Haliburton County. Don't surrender to the temptation to "take it easy". It is never too late to begin an exercise program.
